INQUI'RE (V.) to examine, ſearch, look into, aſk, demand, after or for.

INQUI'RY or INQUISI'TION (S.) a ſearch into or after any thing, an examination, aſking, or demanding; alſo the name of an eccleſiaſtical court in the church of Rome, called the Holy Office, particularly erected and uſed in Spain, Portugal, Italy, and the countries depending thereon, for the puniſhment of hereſy; though other countries have had them, but upon account of the extraordinary ſeverity and cruelty uſed in the puniſhment of thoſe called offenders, it has been laid down in France, and many other countries that ſtill retain the Popiſh religion. Take the following account of its riſe and progreſs: Before the converſion of Conſtantine the Great, the biſhops only examined into doctrines, and puniſhed hereſy with excommunication; but after the emperors became Chriſtians, they ordained that ſuch as were convicted and excommunicated, ſhould be alſo baniſhed and forfeit their eſtates; this continued till about the year 800, when the weſtern biſhops power was enlarged to the authority of citing perſons to their courts, both to convict and puniſh them by impriſonment or penances; this continued till the 12th century, when hereſy, as it was then called, being very much increaſed by the Albigenſes and Waldenſes, pope Gregory IX. in a council held at Tholouſe in 1229, eſtabliſhed new conſtitutions, committing the whole management to the biſhops; but afterwards thinking theſe too indulgent, he gave the direction of his inquiſition to the Dominicans, who for their cruelty were baniſhed Tholouſe by the inhabitants, ſo that this court was never firmly ſettled in France; all Italy received it except the kingdom of Naples. This tribunal takes cognizance of Hereſy, Judaiſm, Mahometaniſm, Sodomy, and Polygamy. People ſtand in ſo much fear of it, that parents deliver their children, and huſbands their wives to its officers, without daring to murmur in the leaſt; the priſoners are ſhut up in frightful dungeons, where they are kept for ſeveral months till they accuſe themſelves, being never confronted by witneſſes; their friends go in mourning for them as if dead, and dare neither ſolicit their pardon, nor come near them, and are frequently forced to fly the country for fear of being taken likewiſe; the power of the inquiſition is very much curbed in Venice, where it ſeems rather a political inſtrument to preſerve the ſtate than the church; in the Indies, it is extravagantly ſevere, for though there muſt be the oaths of ſeven witneſſes to condemn a man, the depoſition of ſlaves and children are allowed and taken, and the perſon is tortured till he condemns himſelf; the ſlighteſt expreſſion againſt the church or inquiſition-office, is a ſufficient fault; in Law, an inquiſition is the proceeding in matters criminal by the office of the judge, or by the great inqueſt before juſtices in eyre.

INVE'NTION (S.) an art, ſcience, machine, &c. found out or diſcovered; alſo the faculty of the mind, whereby the genius or inclination of a perſon is known, and his underſtanding, judgment, and readineſs of wit or preception are diſcovered; alſo a feſtival in the church of Rome, kept in memory of the day on which the croſs of our Saviour was found by the empreſs Helena in the time of Conſtantine the Great, which is called the Invention of the holy Croſs, and which is ſaid to be in this manner; ſhe being at Jeruſalem, was informed that the croſs of our Saviour was buried in his ſepulchre; upon this ſhe ordered them to dig, where they found the croſs and nails, together with the croſſes of the two thieves, but the wood on which the inſcription was written being parted from the croſſes, they could not diſtinguiſh our Saviour's from the reſt, till Macarius biſhop of Jeruſalem put them upon the following expedient; he ordered a dying woman to be brought and placed upon the croſſes, two of which gave her no manner of relief, but being ſet upon the third, ſhe perfectly recovered the firſt moment ſhe touched it, by which they concluded this was our Saviour's; the empreſs built a ſtately church in the place where the croſs was found, where ſhe left ſome part of the wood richly ornamented, carrying the reſt with the nails to Conſtantinople; this ſtory wants no comment, it is ſufficiently loaded with lying abſurdities not to need confutation.

INVE'NTIVE (A.) ready-witted, ſuited to the projecting or diſcovering of new matters or things.

I'NVENTORY (S.) a catalogue, liſt, or orderly account of goods; and this is applied to a perſon's eſtate when he begins a ſet of books in the mercantile form, he firſt makes or takes an inventory or particular of his ſtock or eſtate, and then digeſts them under proper heads, and makes them debtors to ſtock for the value; alſo when a perſon dies and his houſhold goods, or ſtock in trade is valued, the commons require an inventory; but when they are ſold by auction, &c. it is called a catalogue; ſo books the ſame, but parcels or portions of land, tenements, &c. is called a particular.

INVE'RSE (S.) backward, or contrary, inſide out, or upſide down; ſo in Arithmetick, it is called the inverſe or backward rule of three, where the third or queſtioning number does does not bear the ſame proportion to the fourth as the firſt does to the ſecond; as if I lend a perſon 100*l.* for ſix months, how long muſt he lend me 50*l.* to requite the favour? The anſwer is 12 months; here 50 does not bear the ſame, but a much greater proportion to 12 than 100 does to 6.

INVE'RSION (S.) a changing the order, proportion, or diſpoſition of things, words, &c. by making the laſt firſt, &c.

INVE'RT (V.) to change the order or diſpoſition of things into a contrary way, to turn backward or inſide out.

INVE'ST (V.) to put into, inſtal, or confirm a perſon in an office, poſſeſſion of an eſtate, dignity, or title; and in War, it is to circumſcribe a place, town, or city ſo ſtrictly and vigorouſly, that no poſſible communication or relief can be brought to it without the beſiegers knowledge and conſent.

I'NVOCATE or INVO'KE (V.) to beg of, call upon, pray, beſeech, or deſire, help, aid or aſſiſtance from another; but moſt commonly is underſtood of praying to God for his help and aſſiſtance in any particular, or the common affairs of life.

INVOCA'TION (S.) a begging for help, a calling for aſſiſtance, eſpecially in a religious ſenſe; the ancient poets, and the moderns in imitation of them, in the entrance of their poems called upon the Muſes, &c. and the heathens upon their great men or heroes after their death; and ſo by degrees, the martyrs and ſaints who were in great veneration among the primitive chriſtians, were honoured with orations and rhetorical apoſtrophe's, after their deceaſe, upon a belief of their preſence at their tombs, which at laſt crept into an idolatrous worſhip, and univerſal invocation, ſo as to have particular offices inſerted into the common ſervice-books; and is now ſo extravagant among the more blinded or ignorant part of the Romiſh church, as to offer ten prayers to the Virgin Mary for one to God Almighty; the eaſtern church begun in the 5th century by calling upon the dead, and demanding their ſufferage as preſent in the divine offices; but the weſtern church carried it ſo far as frequently to canonize thoſe they had any regard for, though the wickedneſs of their lives gave them no title to any ſuch honour, to make proceſſions, maſſes, litanies, prayers and oblations for and to them.

I'NVOYCE (S.) an account of goods ſhipped in one place, and conſigned to a factor, &c. at another, by which he is capable of knowing the quantity and charge, and regulating himſelf in the reception or ſale of them.

INVO'LVE (V.) to roll, fold, or wrap up any thing; alſo to entangle, encumber, or engage in any troubleſome affair; in Arithmetick, or Algebra, it is the multiplying a number or root one or more times into or by itſelf.

INVO'LUNTARINESS (S.) unwillingneſs, or the doing or forbearing any thing againſt the natural deſire, will, or inclination of a perſon.

INVO'LUNTARY (A.) contrary to, or againſt a perſon's will, inclination, or conſent; in Phyſick, any infirmity that occaſions the excretions, ſuch as urine in the diabetes, &c. to come away againſt the will of the patient, through the weakneſs of the veſſels to retain it.

INVOLU'TION (S.) the wrapping or folding a thing up; but is commonly applied to the numerical multiplying a root or number into, or by itſelf, which when done once is called the ſecond power, or a ſquare; when that product is again multiplied by the root, or original number, it is called the third power, or the cube, &c.

INU'RE (V.) to accuſtom, to uſe, to cauſe a perſon to do the ſame thing often.

INVU'LNERABLE (A.) that cannot be hurt or wounded.

I'NWARD (A.) on or towards the inſide of a thing.

JOB (S.) the name of one of the canonical books of the Old Teſtament, concerning the author of which there are abundance of conjectures; ſome think it was wrote by Job himſelf in Arabick or Syriack, and that Moſes, or ſome other Iſraelite tranſlated it into Hebrew afterwards; ſome, that Elihu, one of Job's friends, wrote it; others, that Moſes, Solomon, Iſaiah, &c. were the authors; but it is generally allowed the original language of it is Hebrew, but blended with many Arabick and Chaldee expreſſions, and ſeveral particular turns that are not to be met with in Hebrew, for which reaſon it is a very difficult and obſcure book to tranſlate truly; it is written in verſe, but not confined to any particular meaſure or cadence, and the beauty conſiſts principally in noble expreſſions, bold and ſublime thoughts, lively emotions, fine deſcriptions, and a great diverſity of characters; all antiquity does not furniſh a poem more copious, lofty, magnificent, diverſified, adorned or affecting than this.

JOBB (S.) a piece of work of any ſort or kind, but commonly applied to a ſmall thing or matter, eſpecially in the repairing or mending way.

JO'BBER (S.) one that does ſmall pieces of work, eſpecially in repairs; alſo the name of one that deals in buying and ſelling of ſhares in companies ſtocks, annuities, or other government ſecurities.

I'PSWICH (S.) in Suffolk, formerly called Gipeſwich; its ſituation is low, in a bottom, and forms a ſort of ſemi-circle, by the ſide of the river; the town is large, extending a mile from St. Matthews to St. Hellens, upon the road, and as much from north to ſouth; it has a good bridge over the river Gippan, by ſome called the Orwell; formerly it had a commodious haven, and a very great trade, which occaſioned it to be very populous, and to have abundance of rich merchants in it; but at preſent its trade and ſhipping is much decreaſed. It is divided into four wards, which contain twelve pariſhes, with very large ſtreets, and but few people; the town is neat and commodious, though built in the ancient faſhion; the market place is very ſpacious, and the butchery (which was built by cardinal Woolſey, who was born here, and whoſe father was a butcher) is fine, the inns are good, and all manner of proviſions cheap. It is a corporation governed by two bailiffs, who are juſtices of the peace, ten portmen, four of which are juſtices of the peace, two coroners, 24 common-council-men, two chamberlains, a recorder, and a town-clerk, &c. ſends two burgeſſes to parliament: The bailiffs paſs fines and recoveries, hold pleas for all manner of actions, both civil and criminal, and appoint the aſſize of bread, &c. No freeman can be forced to ſerve on juries out of the town againſt his will, or bear any offices for the king, but ſheriffs for the county; are toll free in all other parts of the kingdom, are intitled to all waifs and eſtrays, &c. and to all goods caſt on ſhore within their admiralty juriſdiction, which extends on the coaſt of Eſſex beyond Harwich, and on both ſides the Suffolk coaſt; diſtant from London 55 computed, and 68 meaſured miles. This town has ſix markets a week for proviſions, but the three chief are Wedneſdays, Fridays, and Saturdays, when all ſorts of goods are brought out of the country; formerly there were 21 churches in this town, of which 12 are ſtill remaining, and the ruins of moſt of the others; it has yet a good maritime trade, though nothing near ſo great as formerly; it is very remarkable, that though ſhips of 500 tons burden may, upon a ſpring tide, come up very near to the town, and ſeveral as large have been built there, yet the river is ſcarce navigable for the ſmalleſt boats above the town.

JU'LIAN PERIOD (S.) is a revolution of 7980 Julian years, compoſed of three cycles multiplied continually one into another, to wit, of the ſun, conſiſting of 28 years, of the moon of 19 years, and of the indiction of 15 years, which is done thus; take for the firſt, ſecond, third, &c. year of this period that which hath the firſt, ſecond, third, &c. of the cycle of the ſun; the firſt, ſecond, third, &c. of the cycle of the moon; and firſt, ſecond, third, &c. of the cycle of the indiction, which will require 7980 years to return to a year marked with the ſame number in each cycle; this period was invented by Jupiter Scaliger about 1580; the uſe of this period is to have a fixed rule for the computing of years among the different opinions of chronologers, who do not agree in the epocha and calculation of years from the creation of the world; the firſt year of the Chriſtian æra, in all our computations, is univerſally allowed to be the 4714th of this period, ſo that to find the year of the Julian period any year of Chriſt is, is only adding the given year to 4713, and the ſum is the year of the period; as this preſent year 1754 is the 6466th year of the period; or any action being given in the year of the Julian period, to know what year of Chriſt it happened in, if the given number exceed 4713, ſubſtract that from it, and the remainder is the year of the action; as ſuppoſe, I ſay the revolution in England happened in the 6401 year of the Julian period, what year of Chriſt was it? Anſwer, 1688; but if the queſtion be how many years before Chriſt was any action; as ſuppoſe Rome was ſaid to be built in the 3962 year of the period, this taken from 4714, leaves 752 years before Chriſt, &c.

JU'LIAN YEAR (S.) is that lately uſed in England and ſeveral other countries, called the old year, introduced by Julius Cæſar, which for 3 years together has but 365 days, but every fourth year 366 days, upon account that 6 hours and 365 days was the mean ſolar year, and 4 times 6 hours made one natural day; but this, by experience, is found to be too much by about 11 minutes, ſo that in about 131 years this account will be one day too late, which occaſions the difference between the Julian and Gregorian account or year.

JULY' (S.) the name of the ſeventh month, according to the vulgar computation, and formerly the fifth, but now alſo the ſeventh, according to the civil account; about the 30th day of this month, what are commonly called the dog days begin, which by reaſon of the ſultrineſs of the air is ſeldom ſo healthful as the other ſeaſons of the year; the Painters repreſent this month by a ſtrong robuſt man, having a light yellow jacket on,

K.

GREAT diſputes have ariſen, and are ſtill maintained by the Grammarians, whether K be a different letter from C, becauſe the Latins very ſeldom uſed it otherwiſe than as a numeral; the French, in imitation of them, have likewiſe very little uſe for it excepting in the foreign names of places, men, or things, &c. upon which account ſome would alſo have it left out in thoſe Engliſh words derived from the Latin, which the common Engliſh uſage is to ſtrengthen, by adding K to it, as muſick, arithmetick, &c. and therefore I ſhall deem it a diſtinct letter, upon account of the Hebrew names in the Bible, as Kadeſh, &c. In our Alphabet, it is the tenth letter, and a great number of words that are begun with K, others begin with C, as Katharine, or Catharine, &c. ſimply, as a numeral it ſtood for 250, but with a daſh over it, thus, $\overline{K}$, 150,000.

KAA'RL CAT (S.) a country word for a male or bore cat.

KAB (S.) a Hebrew meaſure, holding about our pint.

KA'LENDAR (S.) a diary, almanack, or ephemeris, that ſhews the ſeveral days of the week, month, year, &c.

KA'LENDS (S.) the name of the firſt day of every month, according to the Roman computation of time; their month conſiſted of kalends, nones and ides, for the underſtanding of which we are to obſerve, 1. That betwixt the nones and ides there is always a week's interval. 2. That only the kalends are fixed to a certain time of beginning, the nones falling ſometimes at one time and ſometimes at another, the greateſt difficulty being upon account of the unequal length of the months themſelves, January, March, May, July, Auguſt, October, December, having 31 days each, February of 28, and ſometimes of 29 days, April, June, September, and November of 30 days each; and the Roman method of reckoning was backwards; you muſt obſerve, that in thoſe months of 31 days, whoſe ides fall on the 13th of the ſame month, the 14th day is called the 19th before the kalends of February, the 15th is called 18, &c. till you come to the 31ſt, which is called pridie kalendas or the day before the kalends; but this computation being extream difficult to be clearly expreſſed and underſtood by words, I refer you to the kalendar of the Latin Common-prayer-book for tables, &c.

KA'LI (S.) the ſea-herb called glaſs-wort, upon account that the aſhes of this weed being burnt, are made uſe of in making glaſs, ſoap, &c.

KING (S.) the ſupream magiſtrate, monarch, or potentate, in thoſe nations where a ſingle perſon has the power over the people, as in England, France, Spain; among the ancient Greeks and Romans, they were both rulers and prieſts. The common language of kings is we, which began in England in the time of king John; with Us, the law makes it high treaſon barely to imagine or intend the death of the king; he is impowered by the prerogative of his office, to make war or peace, leagues and treaties; to give commiſſions for impreſſing ſoldiers, diſpoſe of magazines, caſtles, ſhips, publick monies, &c. he convokes, adjourns, prorogues and diſſolves parliaments, and may refuſe his aſſent to any bill paſſed by both houſes, without giving his reaſons for it; he may increaſe the number of members of either houſe of parliament at pleaſure, by creating new peers, and beſtowing privileges on towns to ſend, that at preſent have no right of ſending burgeſſes; he may enfranchiſe an alien, and make him a denizen; debts due to him are always to be firſt ſatisfied in caſe of an executorſhip, &c. and till his debt is ſatisfied, he may protect the debtor from the arreſts of others; he may diſtrain for his whole debt of a tenant that holds but part of the land, is not obliged to demand his rent as others are, may ſue in what court he pleaſes, and diſtrain where he liſts; in all doubtful caſes, no ſtatute reſtrains him, unleſs he be particularly named. In caſes where the king is plaintiff, his officers with an arreſt may enter, and if denied, may break open the houſe, and ſeize the party; he has the cuſtody of the eſtates of ideots and lunaticks, and all eſtates revert to him when no heir is to be found; all treaſure trove, that is, money, plate or bullion found, and the owners not known, belongs to him; and alſo all waifs, ſtrays, wrecks, lands recovered from the ſea, &c. He can unite, ſeparate, enlarge, or contract the limits of biſh pricks or eccleſiaſtical benefices, and by his letters erect new biſhopricks, colleges, &c. he can diſpenſe with the rigour of ſuch eccleſiaſtical laws that are not confirmed by act of parliament, as for a baſtard to be a prieſt, a biſhop to hold a benefice in commendam, &c. he can diſpenſe with ſuch acts of parliament where he himſelf alone is concerned, to moderate the ſeverity of the law according to equity, to pardon a man condemned by law, except in appeals of murder; the laws aſcribe various perfections to him, belonging to no other man; no flaw or weakneſs is found in him, no injuſtice or error, no negligence, infamy, ſtain or corruption of blood; he is ſaid to be a corporation in himſelf, and ſo not liable to death; the minute one king dies, his heir is king fully and abſolutely, without any ceremony of coronation, &c. yet, notwithſtanding all theſe great privileges, he cannot make new laws, or raiſe new taxes, without the conſent of the people aſſembled by their repreſentatives in parliament. There are ſome officers that have this appellative, and are called kings at arms, which are the principal heralds to pronounce the king's pleaſure, as to peace, war, &c. Formerly they were created by the king himſelf, but now the ceremony is performed by the earl marſhal, who is commiſſioned for this purpoſe, by an inſtrument duly ſigned by the king himſelf; at the creating garter king at arms, the following particulars are provided, viz. a book and a ſword to be ſworn upon, a gilt crown, and a collar of SS, a bowl of wine, which is the new garter's fee, and a coat of arms, of velvet richly embroidered: The form of coronation is as follows; firſt, garter kneeling down before the king, or his repreſentative the earl marſhal, his majeſty's ſword lying on a book, garter lays his hand upon the book and ſword, while Clarencieux reads the oath, upon which garter kiſſes the book and ſword; then Clarencieux reads the letters patents of his office, at the cloſe of which the earl marſhal takes the bowl of wine, and pouring it upon his head, names him garter; after this he puts on him his coat of arms, the collar of SS about his neck, and the crown upon his head: Clarencieux and Norroy are much the ſame. A common herald has no crown, and his collar of SS is plain ſilver, and his coat is only ſattin embroidered with gold: The difference between a herald and purſuivant is, that the latter's coat of arms is damaſk embroidered, and the oaths ſomewhat different.

LI'TURGY (S.) in general, ſignifies all the ceremonies belonging to the publick celebration of religion, but was commonly taken for the communion ſervice; among the Greeks and Romaniſts, it is reſtrained to ſignify the maſs only, or the holy ſacrifice of the altar; and among Us, the common-prayer; it may be ſatisfactory to ſome to obſerve, that in the firſt ages of the church, the Euchariſt was adminiſtred upon all Sundays, holy-days, and faſting days, and ſometimes oftner; ſometimes there were ſeveral communions in one day, as when the office for ſome ſaint fell in with another feſtival, or when there happened to be a funeral. The order was thus: The congregation being met in the church, the reader began with a leſſon out of the Old Teſtament, and afterwards one out of the New, viz. out of the Acts, or Epiſtles of the Apoſtles; between the leſſons were ſaid or ſung ſome Euchariſtical pſalms, then the biſhop made a ſermon to explain part of the goſpel; the ſermon being ended, the deacons ordered all that did not communicate to retire; firſt they diſmiſſed the Heathens, then the Catechumens and the Penitents; then the biſhop ſtanding at the altar, received from the deacons the oblations of the faithful; the biſhop having bleſſed the bread and wine, offered ſome incenſe, pronounced aloud the preſatical prayers called now in the church of Rome the cannon of the maſs; the elements being bleſſed or conſecrated by the biſhop, he firſt received the communion, and then adminiſtered to the prieſts and deacons, then the monks received, and after them the deaconneſſes, nuns, and virgins, then the children, and laſtly, the common congregation; and if there was a large company, ſeveral prieſts were appointed to give the conſecrated bread, and ſeveral deacons the conſecrated wine; if any of the conſecrated bread was left, they diſtributed it to the children, and what was not conſecrated to the congregation that did not communicate; anciently the liturgies conſiſted of very few ceremonies and prayers, but by degrees became exceedingly clogged with ſuperſtitious and unwarrantable repetitions; the preſent Engliſh liturgy was firſt compoſed, approved and confirmed in parliament, anno 1548, the offices for morning and evening-prayer were put in the ſame form at firſt as they they now ſtand in, only there was no confeſſion nor abſolution, but the office began with the Lord's prayer; and in the communion ſervice the ten commandments were omitted, but in all other reſpects very near the ſame it is now; the offertory was made of bread and wine mixed with water, and in the prayer for Chriſt's church thanks were given to God for his wonderful grace declared in his ſaints, in the bleſſed Virgin, patriarchs, prophets, apoſtles and martyrs; and they commended the ſaints departed to God's mercy and peace, that at the day of reſurrection, we and they may be ſet at God's right hand. To this the conſecratory prayer now uſed was joined as a part, only with theſe words, that are now left out, With thy holy Spirit vouchſafe to bleſs and ſanctify theſe thy gifts and creatures of bread and wine, that they may be to us the body and blood of thy beloved Son, &c. The bread was to be unleavened, round, but no ſtamp upon it. In Baptiſm, beſides the form ſtill retained, a croſs was made on the child's forehead and breaſt, with an adjuration of the devil to go out of him; then the prieſt was to take the child by the right hand, and to place him within the font, where he was to be thrice dipped, if well, otherwiſe ſprinkled; then the prieſt was to put a white veſtment or chryſome upon him, as a token of innocence, and to anoint him on the head, with a prayer for the unction of the Holy Ghoſt. In the office for the ſick, thoſe who deſired to be anointed might have the unction on their forehead or their breaſt only, with a prayer, That as their body was outwardly anointed with oil, ſo they might receive the Holy Ghoſt, with health and victory over ſin and death. At funerals they recommended the perſon to God's mercy, prayed that his ſins may be pardoned, his ſoul delivered from hell, and carried to heaven, and his body be raiſed at the laſt day. Upon the ſolicitation of Calvin and ſome others, in 1551, it was again reviewed, and altered to very near what we now have it.

LO'NDON (S.) the principal or chief city of the Britiſh empire, and is one of the largeſt, richeſt, and moſt populous cities in the world, and at this time the adjacent parts not only of its own immediate ſuburbs, but Weſtminſter, &c. are vulgarly called by the ſame name; it is a prodigy of ſtreets and buildings, filled with the palaces of its kings, queens, princes, and noblemen, as well as the great houſes of the gentry, and common ones of its tradeſmen, together with a great number of magnificent churches, and publick halls and offices; it is ſaid to be originally built 1107 years before the birth of Chriſt, and 350 before Rome; in the time of the Britains, it was always the chief city of the Trinobantes, and the royal ſeat of their kings; under the Romans, it was governed by a prefect, like Rome itſelf, who was ſent yearly by the ſenate to adminiſter juſtice to the inhabitants; in after-times it was under diverſe ſorts of laws, and its chief civil magiſtrate at firſt was called a port-reeve, which by king Richard I. was changed into a bailiff, and by king John into lord mayor, as it ſtill remains; Henry III. ordered not only the mayor and ſheriffs to be choſen yearly, but alſo certain perſons to aſſiſt him, who were called aldermen, were to be annually elected; but this proving inconvenient, in a few years after the ſaid king made the office of alderman to be perpetual during life; anno 1224, he granted to the commonalty of the city of London, to have a common ſeal; in 1226, he further granted the citizens the liberty of free warren, and that they ſhould paſs toll-free throughout England; king Edward I. ordered that the mayor ſhould be apparelled like the aldermen; theſe, with many other great privileges, were granted them by ſundry other kings, which they enjoyed till the year 1683, when by a quo warranto they were deprived of them all, and ſo remained till Chriſtmas, 1688, when the lord chancellor Jefferies brought them their charter again; but leſt this reſtitution ſhould be defective, they procured an act of parliament 2 William and Mary, which revers'd the ſaid judgment, made their ſeveral acts valid, &c, ſo that now the civil government thereof is by the chief magiſtrate, called the lord mayor, who ſits every morning in the houſe or place where he keeps his mayoralty, to hear the complaints of and do juſtice to the citizens, and once in a month or ſix weeks as chief judge of oyer and terminer, or goal-delivery of Newgate, both for the city of London and county of Middleſex; his ordinary juriſdiction extends all over the city, and part of the ſuburbs, and on the river Thames eaſtward to Yendale and the mouth of the river Medway, and weſtward as far as Colney-Ditch, above Staines-Bridge; the aldermen, who are 26 in number, have each his particular ward or diſtrict particularly to attend, and each of theſe have their deputy or deputies under them, and formerly only ſuch of them as had been mayors, and the three next below the chair, were juſtices of the peace by their charter, but now they have all that privilege; the lord mayor is annually choſen on Michaelmas Day, and ſworn the 8th of November following at Guild-Hall, and the 9th before the barons of the Exchequer at Weſtminſter; but if the perſon thus choſen (who is commonly the alderman next below the chair) refuſe to act, the citizens may fine him at pleaſure, unleſs he can ſhew a ſufficient reaſon. When an alderman is to be choſen, the mayor calls a wardmote within that ward, who return two perſons to the lord mayor and court of aldermen, who chuſe one of them, and if the perſon, ſo choſe, refuſe to hold the office, he is liable to be fined 500*l.* The ſheriffs, who are two, are choſe by the livery-men at Guild-Hall on Midſummer-Day, but they are not ſworn in till Michaelmas-Eve following, when each of them give bond to ſerve the corporation faithfully; he that refuſes to ſerve after being thus choſe, muſt either ſwear himſelf not worth 15,000*l.* or be fined 400*l.* and 20 marks, of which the 400*l.* is paid into the common fund of the city, and the 20 marks to the officers of the ſeveral priſons; the ſheriffs, by a grant of king Edward IV. dated 1473, are to have 16 ſerjeants, and each ſerjeant his yeoman; alſo a ſecondary, ſix clerks, a clerk of the papers, four under clerks, and two under ſheriffs. There are 72 companies of different trades, 12 of which are the chief, viz. 1. Mercers; 2. Grocers; 3. Drapers; 4. Fiſhmongers; 5. Goldſmiths; 6. Skinners; 7. Merchant-Taylors; 8. Haberdaſhers; 9. Salters; 10. Ironmongers; 11. Vintners; 12. Clothworkers; and if the mayor is not a member of one of theſe, he muſt be transferred from that of which he before was free, to one of theſe 12, but of late that is not regarded; each ward annually, on December 21, chuſes a certain number of the moſt noted inhabitants, who are called common council-men, who have a ſhare in the government ment of the city; it is now a biſhop's ſee, who was formerly an archbiſhop; it is ſituate upon a riſing bank, along the ſide of the river Thames, which is one of the moſt noted in the whole world, eſpecially for its eaſy navigation, wholeſome water, and great number of ſhips conſtantly coming in and going out with all ſorts of merchandize to all parts of the world; it was for many hundred years ſurrounded with ſtrong walls, the remainder of which are ſtill viſible, but much neglected, and in moſt places intirely eraſed, tho' the ſeveral gates are ſtill kept up with much magnificence, two of which are publick priſons, viz. Newgate and Ludgate. And that nothing may be wanting to render this metropolis compleat in every reſpect, there are a great number of other priſons, beſides the two above, in and near it, each of which have their peculiar privlieges: The publick markets, which are many, are conſtantly and daily ſupplied with all ſorts of proviſions, both within the immediate diſtricts of the city and the adjacent ſuburbs; for tho' that part called Weſtminſter is a city by itſelf, and under a particular government, yet by vulgar account, all that and the prodigious increaſe of new ſquares, ſtreets, courts and all other contiguous buildings, are called by one general name, viz. London; and the number of inhabitants are computed at about one million of perſons. The two cathedrals of St. Paul's and Weſtminſter are two extraordinary ſtructures of magnificence, the firſt for its being a curious production of modern architecture, the laſt of the old Gothick way of building; the minute deſcription of theſe would take up a large volume, and therefore cannot be entered into here.

MA'NIA (S.) in Phyſick, is what is vulgarly called madneſs, eſpecially of the raving kind.

MA'NIACK (S.) a perſon afflicted with madneſs.

MA'NICHEES (S.) a ſect of ancient hereticks that began to infect part of the Chriſtian church about 277, and ſpread itſelf very much in the Eaſt, eſpecially in Egypt, Arabia, and Africa; it took its riſe from one Cubricus, who affectedly changed his name into Manes or a Veſſel; a rich widow, whoſe ſervant he had been, dying without iſſue, left him ſtore of wealth, after which he aſſumed the title of apoſtle, or envoy of Jeſus Chriſt, and that he was the paraclete or comforter that Chriſt promiſed to ſend, and maintained two principles, the one good, and the other bad; the firſt he called light, which did nothing but good, and the ſecond he called darkneſs, which did nothing but evil. Our ſouls, he ſaid, were made by the bad one; they were really rather a ſect of philoſophers, than religious, profeſſing aſtronomy and aſtrology, and pretended to uſe amulets; they affirmed, that Chriſt did not aſſume a real and natural body, but only an imaginary one; that the law of Moſes did not come from God or the good principle, and therefore was abrogated; they abſtained wholly from eating any ſort of fleſh, and though they pretended to receive the books of the New Teſtament, yet they only took ſo much of it as they could ſuit to their own opinions, pretending that whatever was inconſiſtent thereto had been foiſted in by ſome later writers who were half Jews; and, on the other hand, allowed fables and apocryphal books to paſs for apoſtolical writings, and are ſtrongly ſuſpected to have forged ſeveral themſelves; ſeveral other ſects ſprung from this, under various denominations.

MA'NIFEST (A.) open, plain, apparent, evident, clear, not to be contradicted.

MA'NIFEST (V.) to demonſtrate, ſhew, clear,

MA'NOR or MA'NOUR (S.) anciently a certain compaſs of ground was granted by the king to ſome man of worth, for him and his heirs to dwell upon, and to exerciſe ſome juriſdiction more or leſs within that circuit, as he thought good to grant, but performing withal ſuch ſervices, and ſuch rent yearly, as by this grant was required. Now, the lord afterwards parcelling this ſame to other meaner men, receiving rent and ſervices from them, and by that means, as he became tenant to the king, the inferiors became tenants to him; but it is now rather underſtood to be juriſdiction, and royalty incorporeal, than the land and ſuit; for a man may have a manor in groſs, i. e. the right and intereſt of a court baron with the perquiſites, and another enjoy every foot of land belonging to it. A manor may be compounded of divers things, as of an houſe, arable land, paſture, meadow, wood, rent, advowſon, court-baron, &c. and this ought to be by long continuance of time beyond man's memory. Some affirm that a manor cannot now be made, becauſe without a court-baron, and at leaſt two ſuitors, there can be no manor.

MA'NSFIELD (S.) a large town in the foreſt of Sherwood, in the county of Nottingham, well inhabited, and filled with good houſes; the principal buſineſs of the inhabitants is making of malt; its market is weekly on Thurſday; diſtant from London 99 computed, and 116 meaſured miles.

MANSLAU'GHTER (S.) an unlawful killing a man upon ſome ſudden occaſion, without any ſettled or prepenſe malice, in which it differs from murder, and from chance-medley, becauſe it has a preſent intent to kill; it is eſteemed felony, but admitted to clergy for the firſt time, with forfeiture of goods and chattels.

MANSLAY'ER (S.) he who kills a man rather by accident than choice.

MA'NTELET (S.) a ſhort purple mantle worn by the French biſhops over their rochets upon ſome ſpecial occaſions; in War, it is a kind of moveable pent-houſe or parapet made of pieces of timber ſawed into planks about three inches thick, and nailed one over the other

other to about ſix feet high, commonly caſed with tin, and ſet upon ſmall wheels to drive before the pioneers in a ſiege, and ſo ſerve as blinds againſt the enemy's ſmall ſhot; alſo a particular ſort of ſhort ſcarf or cloak now much worn by women over all their cloaths.

MA'NTLE (S.) a looſe open garment to throw over the ſhoulders, worn formerly by generals, and over their armour in wet weather, &c. alſo the uppermoſt garment that nurſes wrap up young infants in before they coat them; in Architecture, it is the lower part of the chimney, or that laid acroſs the jambs, and which ſupports the compartment of the chimney piece.

MA'NTLE (V.) to ſparkle or knit up briſkly, like ſtrong ale bottled, &c. in Hawking, it means ſpreading or extending the wings after the legs, &c.

MA'NTLE-TREE (S.) in Carpentry, is that piece of board or timber that runs croſs the head of the opening part of a chimney, or that part next the hearth where the fire is made, and moſt commonly projects out ſix or eight inches from the plan of the wall, to ſet cups, &c. on.

MA'NTLINGS (S.) in Heraldry, are the embelliſhments round the outſide of the field, imitating a mantle or looſe garment thrown upon it, and lined with ſilk of a different colour, tho' it is now made more like carved work or feathers than any thing elſe.

MA'NTUA or MA'NTOE (S.) a woman's gown, made in the moſt exact manner to fit her ſhape or perſon.

MANUFA'CTURE or MANUFA'CTORY (S.) any ſort of work done or performed by the hand, as the making or weaving linen, woollen, &c. and more particularly if the matter as well as the work be the product of the ſame country; ſometimes a large houſe or ſhop where great numbers work upon the ſame general ſort of goods, is called by this name.

MANUFA'CTURE (V.) to manage, work, or perform with the hands.

MANUFA'CTURER (S.) one who works with his hands, or keeps and directs large numbers of handicraft men to bring any particular ſort of goods to perfection.

MANUMI'SSION (S.) the freeing or infranchiſing of ſlaves, which by the Romans was after three different manners; for either a ſlave, with the conſent of his lord, entered his name in the regiſter, or the prætor laid a wand upon his head, or his maſter manumiſed him in his will: In the firſt caſe, the ſlave was to have ſome ſtock of his own to a moderate value, or if his maſter would give it him, it was the ſame thing; being thus furniſhed, if his maſter ordered him to be entered in the publick roll of the citizens, this gave him freedom: The ſecond manner was at firſt a conſular privilege, but was afterwards lodged in the city prætor, who by laying a wand, called vindicta, upon the ſlave's head, ſet him free; upon which the lictor or ſerjeant uſed to ſtrike the ſlave, and then the publick notary regiſtered his name, and the reaſon of his freedom; ſometimes the Romans turned their ſlaves round, and gave them a box on the ear, and ſo let them go: Thoſe who were freed the third way, or by will, ſhaved their head, and wore a cap as a badge of their liberty; they had alſo a white habit, and a gold ring given them by their maſters, and likewiſe a new name added to the former: Some were freed at entertainments in private company, or by letter, but theſe enjoyed but a reſtrained and imperfect liberty, the others a full and perfect one. If any perſon during his ſlavery had been ſtigmatized or branded for his miſbehaviour, or had been thrown into goal upon ſuſpicion; if in this caſe he had confeſſed his fault, recovered his maſter's favour, and was afterwards manumiſed by him, he was called libertus dedititius, and came only into the loweſt condition of liberty. Among the Athenians, the ſlaves for a ſmall ſum, without the conſent of their maſters, might be made free; and ſometimes, if upon an extraordinary occaſion they behaved gallantly in the field, the ſtate made them free: Thoſe who were enfranchiſed uſed to change their name, or at leaſt clap a new ſyllable or two to it; they likewiſe altered their way of ſhaving. In Conſtantine's time, he ordered, that all the deeds of manumiſſion ſhould be ſigned in the church, in the preſence of the congregation, the biſhop being alſo preſent, by the lords or maſters as witneſſes, who bringing the inſtrument, deſired the biſhop would conſent to the enfranchiſing his ſlave; theſe manumiſſions were paſſed at the altar. There were alſo many other ways of doing the ſame thing, both among the Jews and others, but not now practiſed; as in England, in the Conqueror's time, the maſter delivered them by the

the right-hand to the viſcount in full court, ſhewing them the door, giving them a lance and a ſword, and proclaiming them free; there where alſo ſeveral other ways uſed, as by charter, &c.

MANUMI'T or MANUMI'SE (V.) to make free or ſet at liberty.

MA'NURE (S.) dung, ſoil, marl, lime, or any thing elſe that the huſbandman puts on his ground, to fatten, enrich, or improve it.

MANU'RE (V.) to plough, work, improve, or make land better by labour, dung, clay, lime, &c. mixed together as the ground requires, which according to the nature of the ſoil and purpoſe, it is intended for, is very different; for in the North-Riding of Yorkſhire, where the ſoil is ſandy, they manure it with clay, and then it will bear barley, wheat, oats, &c. but without it will bear nothing but rye; this manure, as it is very ſtrong, will laſt upwards of forty years; in boggy or heathy ground, they uſe ſea ſhells, as cockles, perriwinkles, &c. with good ſucceſs; in the weſt of England, they uſe a brackiſh ſea ſand, which is obſerved to quicken dead land, ſo that by this means that which would otherwiſe become the barreneſt part of the country, becomes the richeſt.

MA'NUSCRIPT (S.) a book wrote by the hand, and now it commonly means an original that was never printed.

MA'NWORTH (S.) in our old Law, was the price or value of a man's head, every man according to his degree, being rated at a certain price, according to which ſatisfaction uſed to be made to his lord if any one killed him.

MA'RCGRAVE (S.) a German title equal in dignity to our marquis.

MARCH (S.) by the vulgar account the third month of the year, and now alſo the ſame by the civil and eccleſiaſtical account, though formerly the firſt, the year then beginning on the 25th day of this month; the ancient painters repreſented this month by a man of a tawny and fierce aſpect, with a helmet on his head, leaning upon a ſpade, holding the ſign Aries in his right hand, and almond bloſſoms and cyons in his left, and a baſket of ſeeds on his arm; but it is to be noted, that theſe ſignatures are not univerſal, and proper to all countries and climates; in War, it is the going or moving of an army from one place to another.

MARCH (V.) to move or go forward, as an army does; alſo ſpoken of or to a perſon that either is, or is ordered to be gone, or abſcond from the place of his ordinary reſidence.

MA'RCHES (S.) the limits or boundaries that were formerly appointed and ſettled between England and Wales, and England and Scotland.

MA'RCHET (S.) an ancient fine paid by the tenant to his lord upon the marriage of one of the the tenant's daughters: This cuſtom obtained throughout all England, Wales, and Scotland, with ſome variation, and is ſtill in uſe in ſome places, as in the manor of Dinover in Caermarthenſhire, the tenant pays the lord upon the marriage of his daughter 10 s. In Scotland and the North of England, the lord was impowered to lie with the bride the firſt night, which cuſtom was abrogated by king Malcolm III. at the inſtance of his queen, and inſtead thereof the tenant was to pay a mark to the lord.

MA'RCHIONESS (S.) the wife or lady of a marqueſs.

MA'RCHPANE (S.) a pleaſant confection or cake made of almonds, ſugar, flour, &c.

MARE (S.) a ſhe or female horſe.

MA'RESCHAL or MA'RSHAL (S.) in the French Army, is a conſiderable dignity; they are properly the ancient eſquires of the king. By their firſt inſtitution, they had the command of the van-guard, to obſerve the enemy, and to chuſe proper places to encamp the army: Now they judge all military affairs by themſelves or their lieutenants; till the time of Francis I. their number was but two, who were allowed but 500 livres per annum in war, and nothing in peace; but ſince they are much increaſed in number, allowance, and honour; they are now the arbitrators of quarrels among the nobility; their place depends abſolutely on the crown, nor can they be deprived during life, tho' the king may ſuſpend them from the exerciſe of their function; this honour is not hereditary, but the reward of merit and great actions; there are various ſorts of them, as, mareſchals of France, of the camp, &c. who accordingly are ſuperior in honour, dignity, and command.

MARFORIO (S.) a famous ſtatue in the city of Rome, placed oppoſite to another called Paſquin, upon which the anſwers to the ſatyrical libels fixed upon Paſquin, are likewiſe fixed or put.

MA'RGENT or MA'RGIN (S.) the edge, brim, or brink of any thing, as of a pond, river, &c. but eſpecially applied to the blank ſpace that is left in printed or written books, either for beauty or convenience of writing obſervations or explanations, from thence called marginal notes.

MARK (S.) ſometimes ſignifies a particular ſort of character put upon bales, boxes, cheſts, hogſheads, and other merchandize, to diſtinguiſh the goods of one trader from thoſe of another; ſometimes they are certain ſtamps put upon ſilver veſſels to aſcertain their fineneſs, and upon knives, ſciſſors, razors, &c. to ſhew who was the maker, and for many other purpoſes; it is alſo the name of a man, and in particular of one of the evangeliſts, who was the diſciple and interpreter of St. Peter; ſome affirm he was one of the ſeventy, but forſook our Saviour upon hearing him ſay, John vi. 55. Except ye eat the fleſh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you; but St. Peter convincing him of his miſtake, he returned and continued ſtedfaſt in the faith, accompanying Peter to Rome, where he wrote his goſpel. Authors are divided about the language that it was wrote in, ſome affirming, that as it was wrote at Rome, and for the uſe of the Chriſtians there, it was originally in Latin, others affirm it was Greek; but no great harm would ariſe, ſuppoſe we ſhould imagine, that St. Mark for the uſe of the Romans, made a Latin copy, and for others a Greek one, &c. There is alſo a religious order of regular canons, founded at Mantua by one Albert Spinola, a prieſt, towards the end of the 12th century, called the congregation of St. Mark; alſo an order of knighthood in the republick of Venice, which is conferred only on thoſe who have done ſome extraordinary ſervices to the commonwealth; it is alſo the name of an old coin, in which fines, &c. of law are ſtill made, and the name retained, and is in value 13 s. 4 d. alſo a butt to aim or ſhoot at, or a guide to do or perform ſomething by.

MARK (V.) to diſtinguiſh one thing from another by ſetting ſome inſcription, character, &c. upon it; alſo a particular work taught to girls, whereby they make the ſeveral letters of the alphabet, in order to put upon the family linen, to diſtinguiſh each perſon's from that of another's.

MA'RKET (S.) a place where all ſorts of goods and proviſions are publickly ſold, and theſe are ſometimes called fairs, eſpecially in Germany; ſometimes it means the vent, call, or demand there is for any commodity; formerly, Bracton affirms, that one market ought to be diſtant from all others at leaſt ſix miles and a half, and one third of a half; but as the people increaſed, ſo did the privilege of keeping markets; and indeed now, in cities and great towns markets are reſtrained to almoſt proviſions only, every ſhop being a ſort of market for other manufactures; anciently it was cuſtomary to have moſt fairs and markets kept on Sundays in the church-yards, becauſe of the great diſtance of the inhabitants from thoſe places, ſo that the buſineſs of religion and trade was carried on together; and tho' this cuſtom was prohibited by ſeveral kings, yet it was kept up till Henry VIth's time, when it was effectually ſuppreſſed; there are ſome remains of this practice ſtill in the moſt northern parts of the kingdom; many laws, with ſevere penalties, have been made about regulating the markets, to prevent monopolizing, foreſtalling, and other irregularities, which, thro' neglect of being executed, occaſions too much of thoſe practices paſſing unpuniſhed.

Clerk of the Market, an officer whoſe buſineſs it is to keep a ſtandard of all weights and meaſures according to the king's ſtandard kept in the Exchequer, and to take care that all the weights and meaſures uſed in the market be agreeable.

MA'RKETABLE (A.) any commodity that for its goodneſs and faſhion is ſaleable.

MARKET-JEW' (S.) in Cornwall, a ſea-port town with a bad harbour; it is a ſmall town, whoſe market is weekly on Thurſday; diſtant from London 228 computed, and 288 meaſured miles.

MARL (S.) a ſort of fat, clayey, ſoft, foſſile earth, caſt on land to render it fruitful, of various colours and qualities; it is ſometimes uſed in the making of lime, being burnt like other ſtone.

MA'RLBOROUGH (S.) in Wiltſhire, is an ancient borough-town that ſends two members to parliament, and is governed by a mayor, 12 aldermen, 24 burgeſſes, and other inferior officers; it is a town that has a pretty good ſhop-keeping trade, but not much of the manufacturing part; its market is weekly on Saturday; the river Kennet, made navigable by act of parliament, comes up to it; diſtant from London 62 computed, and 75 meaſured miles.

MA'RLINE (S.) a ſmall line made of untwiſted hemp well tarred, to ſeaſe the ends of ropes from farcing out; they alſo ſeaſe the ſides of the ſtraps at the arſe of the blocks together with this, and if a ſail be ript out of the bolt-rope, (in caſe of hurry or cold weather ſo as they cannot ſow it) they put marline thro' the oilet-holes, and faſten the bolt-rope and ſail together.

Marline Spike, a ſmall iron inſtrument, made on purpoſe to ſplice ſmall ropes together, and to open bolt-ropes when they ſow in the ſail.

MA'RLOW (S.) in Buckinghamſhire, ſituated under the Chiltern or Chalk Hills, near the Thames, over which it has a bridge, it is a pretty good borough town, that ſends two members to parliament; diſtant from London 26 computed, and 31 meaſured miles.

MA'RMALADE or MA'RMALET (S.) a pleaſant cooling confection made of the juice or pulp of various fruits, as plumbs, apricots, quinces, &c. boiled up with ſugar, &c.

MA'RMORA ARUNDELIANA (S.) certain tables of ancient marble, whereon is carved a chronicle of Athens, 263 years before Jeſus Chriſt, preſented to the univerſity of Oxford by the earl of Arundel, who procured them from the eaſt; in 1676, Dr. Prideaux publiſhed an account of all the inſcriptions.

MA'RMOSET (S.) a ſort of black monkey, with a ſhagged mane or neck; alſo a groteſque figure in building.

MA'RONITES or MA'RONISTS (S.) certain Chriſtians in the Eaſt, whoſe original founder was one Maron; they were formerly ſaid to have embraced the errors of the Jacobites, Neſtorians and Monothelites, but now are reconciled to the Roman church; they ſpeak a ſort of Syriack; they have a patriarch, archbiſhops, biſhops, and about 150 curates, but are ſo oppreſſed by the Turks, that the clergy are forced to work for their living; they are very hoſpitable, and entertain pilgrims according to their ability; they keep Lent according to the ancient rigour, eating but one meal a day, and that not before they hear maſs, which is about four in the afternoon; they have a great reſpect for their prieſts, who are diſtinguiſhed by a blue ſcarf that they wear about their caps; married men may become prieſts, but none may marry, after they are entered into orders. Pope Gregory XIII. founded a college at Rome, where their youth are educated by Jeſuits, and then ſent into their own country; their clergy wear no ſurplices nor cornered caps, keep particular faſts and feaſts, and diſagree in many particulars from the church of Rome; their patriarch is a monk of the order of St. Anthony, and claims the title of patriarch of Antioch, and is always called Peter, tho' his real name be John, &c. they read their ſervice both in the vulgar language and in Latin.

MAROO'NING (S.) the putting a perſon aſhore on an uninhabited iſland.

MARO'TICK STILE (S.) a peculiar manner of writing poetry, among the French, gay and merry, yet ſimple and natural, introduced by Marot, and compleated by Voiture and Fontaine.

Letters of MARQUE (S.) are inſtruments authorizing the ſubjects of one prince to make repriſals upon, or captures of the ſhips or ſubjects of another prince or country, upon account of that prince or country's not having made proper redreſſes or reparations of ſuch damage or captures that have been made upon the ſhips or ſubjects of the former, by the ſubjects of the latter.

MA'RQUESS or MA'RQUIS (S.) an order of nobility between a duke and an earl, or count, firſt introduced by Richard II. who, in the year 1337, created his favourite Robert Vere, who was then earl of Oxford, marquis of Dublin; the title given to a marquis in writing is, The moſt noble, moſt honourable, and potent prince; and by the king he is called, Our right truſty, and intirely beloved couſin; the honour is hereditary, and the eldeſt ſon, by the courteſy of England, during the father's life, is called earl or lord of a place, but the younger ſons are all called John, Thomas,

Thomas; Joſeph, &c. a marquis's cap is the ſame with a duke's, but their coronets differ, a duke's having flowers and leaves, a marquis's flowers or pyramids crowned or topped with pearls.

MA'RQUETRY (S.) inlaid work, or fineering, being a plane of oak or well-dried fir, covered with ſeveral pieces of fine hard wood, of various colours, in the forms of birds, flowers, knots, &c. and ſometimes intermixed with tortoiſe ſhell, mother of pearl, ſilver, &c. ſometimes it is compoſed of glaſs of various colours, and ſometimes of precious ſtones or curious marbles, and then it is called Moſaick work.

MA'RQUISATE (S.) the office, duty, government, authority, or eſtate that gives the title of marquis.

MARR (V.) to ſpoil, hurt, prejudice, hinder, corrupt, deface, prevent, &c.

MA'RRIAGE (S.) that honourable contract that perſons of different ſexes make with one another, whereby they are obligated to live in love and harmony together, and from whence ſprings the true benefit of kingdoms and commonwealths, by producing children for their continuance and increaſe, whoſe parents being known, are obliged to do their utmoſt, by all lawful methods, to maintain and educate them, without being burthenſome to the ſtate. To render this contract the more ſacred, moſt civilized nations have accompanied it with ſeveral religious ceremonies, and made it the work of the prieſt rather than the civil magiſtrate, to ſtrike the greater awe upon all preſent, and make them the more careful and fearful of breaking through the conditions; the church of Rome has carried it ſo far as to make it one of their ſacraments, and yet are ſo contradictious as to forbid all their clergy to marry. The Turks have three ſorts of wives, viz. legitimate ones, which they actually marry; wives in kebin, which they may hire for any ſet time, and are at liberty to leave them again; and ſlaves, which they buy like any other commodity; certain degrees of conſanguinity are now forbid to marry, though originally they were unavoidably permitted; anciently the men received no portion with their wives, but rather bought them of their parents, or at leaſt made large preſents to them according to their abilities.

Duty of Marriage, was an ancient mulct, fine, or obligation upon women who held fees that required military ſervice, to marry, that ſo their huſbands might render thoſe ſervices and ſo indemnify the lords, which they themſelves could not do upon account of their ſex; now it means all thoſe obligations that are mutually due from both ſexes that are married together.

Marriage Muſick, a ſneering, bantering appellation for the crying of young children, by way of ridiculing that honourable ſtate.

MA'RRIAGEABLE (A.) fit or of an age and ſtature ſuitable to marry, and is commonly applied to virgins of about 14 or 15 years old.

MA'RRIAGEBLENESS (S.) the ſtate or condition of a perſon, for age, ſtature, health, &c. that makes them fit or ripe for marriage.

MA'RROW (S.) the choice delicious fat, ſuet, or oily ſubſtance contained in the cavities of the bones of moſt creatures, eſpecially the large thigh, ſhin, or other bones that are conſiderably hollow; alſo the beſt or choiceſt part of any book, ſpeech, &c. or the moſt uſeful part of a ſcience, &c. is called the marrow of it.

MA'RRY (V.) to enter into contract, or take a woman to wife according to the rites, ceremonies or cuſtoms of any particular people or nation.

MARS (S.) among the ancient Heathens, was called the god of war; he was by them ſaid to be the ſon of Juno, who brought him forth by touching a flower that was ſhewn her by Flora; this is feigned to be done by her out of revenge, becauſe Jupiter her huſband begat Pallas out of his brain without her. Mars is ſaid to be born in Thracia. The poets ſpeak of his amours with Venus, the goddeſs of Love and Beauty, and of their being ſurprized by Vulcan her huſband; the ancient idolaters ſacrificed a horſe, a wolf, and a dog, to Mars; among the Chymiſts, they expreſs iron by Mars; the Aſtronomers make him the third planet deſcending in order, of a hot and dry nature, finiſhing his revolution in almoſt 12 years; he has the ſun for his centor, ſo that when he is acronically oppoſite to him he ſeems to be below him, nearer the earth, and appears almoſt as big as Venus, having a greater parallax than the ſun, viz. four minutes at ſome times, ſo that when he is in the loweſt apſis of his orb, we find a great intention of heat if it be ſummer, and a great remiſſion of cold if it be winter, and the contrary when he is in his apogæon, the diſtance between them being computed at 1690280 miles; the Aſtrologers call him the leſſer infortune, as being an enemy to human nature upon account of the heat and dryneſs of his qualities, and with them ſignifies military men, ſurgeons, ſmiths, &c. and of diſeaſes, ſuch as proceed from aduſt choler, and heat of blood, as acute fevers, yellow jaundice, ſmall-pox, &c. with the Heralds, it ſignifies gules or red.

MARSH (S.) any low lands that are frequently overflowed with the waters of the neighbouring ſeas or rivers, and which when the water is out is commonly very fertile, occaſioned by the ſlime, ooze, &c. that is waſhed in upon it.

MA'RSHAL (S.) in England, there are many officers called by this name, that are of different ſorts and authorities, the chief whereof is the earl Marſhal of England, who is one of the great officers of the crown, that takes cognizance of all matters of war and arms, determines contracts concerning deeds of arms upon land, and matters concerning war within the realm, which cannot be determined by common law, in which he uſually proceeds according to the civil law; this office is hereditary, and has for many ages been in the houſe of Norfolk. Anciently he had ſeveral courts under him, but now only the Marſhalſea, where he may ſit in judgment againſt criminals offending within the verge of the court; there are other inferior officers of this name, as marſhal of the juſtices in eyre, marſhal of the King's-Bench, who has the cuſtody of the priſon called by that name. Knight-marſhal is an officer of the Marſhalſea, under whom are the marſhal's men, who are properly the king's bailiffs, and arreſt in the verge of the court, when a warrant is backed by the board of Green-cloth; alſo in an Army, there is an inferior officer belonging to every company, called by this name, and ſeveral others, as the city-marſhal, &c.

MA'RSHALLING (S.) the ordering or arranging things or perſons in the proper manner, ſo as to anſwer the purpoſe they are deſigned for; in Heraldry, it is the diſpoſing all perſons and things in all manner of ſolemnities, whether feſtival or mournful, ſuch as coronations, inſtalments, marriages, burials, &c. according to their ſeveral ranks or degrees; alſo the diſpoſing of coat-armours pertaining to diſtinct families, and of their contingent ornaments, with their parts and appurtenances in their proper places, in one and the ſame ſhield or eſcutcheon.

MARTYRO'LOGY (S.) a catalogue or hiſtory of ſuch perſons as have ſuffered for the profeſſion of any religious principles, and is particularly underſtood of the perſecutions and ſufferings of the firſt profeſſors of Chriſtianity under the Heathen kings, emperors, or ſtates they lived in; it is alſo applied to the particular ſufferings of particular profeſſions, as of the Proteſtants under Popiſh governors, &c. In theſe hiſtories are inſerted the names of the perſecutors and the perſecuted, with the reaſon why, the manner how, and time when, &c.

MA'RVEL (V.) to wonder, be ſurprized, or aſtoniſhed at, to admire, or expreſs great ſurprize at a thing.

MA'RVELOUS (A.) ſtrange, wonderful, amazing, uncommon, &c.

St. MA'RY (S.) ſometimes means the Virgin or mother of Chriſt, and ſometimes ſome other perſon the church of Rome has thought fit to dignify with this character; there are alſo many orders, both religious and military, that go by this name.

MA'SCHIL (S.) this word or term is often found in the titles of the Pſalms, and ſignifies an inſtructor; but ſome think it was only the name of an inſtrument or of a tune thoſe pſalms were played upon or ſung to; ſome ſay, that at the ſinging or repeating thoſe pſalms, the Jews expounded or explained them, but the pſalms themſelves ſhew they are rather to be underſtood as ſo many leſſons of direction or inſtruction.

MA'SCULINE (A.) robuſt, manly, bold, courageous, ſomething belonging to the male kind; the Aſtrologers have maſculine planets and ſigns, not to denote any real diſtinction of ſex in the celeſtial bodies, but only analogically to ſignify the qualities, they pretend them to be principally endowed with; thoſe that excel in active qualities, that is, in heat or cold, they call maſculine, and the paſſive qualities, or moiſture and drought, they call feminine planets. In the French Poetry, thoſe rhimes that end with a ſtrong accent, or ſuch words as have not E feminine to terminate them, are called maſculine rhimes or verſes.

ME'DAL (S.) a piece of metal repreſenting the faces of princes, or other illuſtrious perſons for arts, learning, arms, &c. on the one ſide, and ſome figures or emblematical repreſentations on the other or reverſe ſide. All the lovers of antiquity have been admirers of medals, becauſe either from the legend round or under it, the figures, &c. they frequently come at the explanation of what they otherwiſe would have been ignorant of, tho' to conclude what the phyſiognomy of the party was from the old medals is very precarious, few having been done by excellent artiſts, and moſt after the death of the perſons repreſented, by the deſcendants of the parties, or by ſtates in honour of the hero; of this ſort there are a great many Greek, Sicilian, and Italian or Roman medals ſtill remaining, no leſs remarkable for their curioſity than age. The moſt beautiful of the Roman medals began about the reign of Auguſtus, and held on till about the time of Severus, in which period they were wrought in all kinds of metals, and finiſhed with wonderful ſtrokes of art, and then as the empire declined, ſo did the excellency of their coin and medals. The learned have made the uſe of medals very extenſive, as by the legends to know the characters in uſe at the time of their ſtamping, and from thence to judge of the antiquity and genuineneſs of manuſcripts; from hence may alſo be diſcovered the agreement between the Greek and Roman characters, and how far the latter ſprang from the former, the ſeveral mutations and alterations that have been made therein from time to time, &c. from hence may alſo be learned the abbreviations and orthography practiſed by the ancients, by which the ſeveral alterations in the Roman language in particular may be reduced to their proper periods of time: Upon the whole, nothing can better fix the chronological æras and periods of time than coins and medals, which were ſtruck by publick authority, and upon ſolemn occaſions, eſpecially among the Romans, where the moſt remarkable things of that vaſt empire are explained; from hence we learn the figure of their ancient gallies and other veſſels, with the manner of their engaging at ſea, and unqueſtionable records of the actions of their greateſt generals, their military expeditions, legions, diſcipline, encampments, victories, triumphs, of the publick bounties of their emperors, either in giving largeſſes or in releaſing taxes, their alliances and truces, the dignity and habit of their magiſtracy, the titles and date of their laws, &c. by this we ſee their temples and publick courts of judicature, their theatres and amphitheatres; this gives us a view of their ſolemn proceſſions, religious poſtures, and what belongs to their ſacrifices, their emperors haranguing their troops, giving audience to ambaſſadors, beſtowing crowns upon eaſtern princes, and receiving the ſubmiſſions of conquered nations; and ſince ſo much benefit may accrue from true medals, the diſcovery of counterfeit ones may be of uſe; the firſt of this kind may be ſome made by the moderns, that never had any being among the ancients, ſuch as thoſe of Priam, Æneas, Tully, Virgil, the wiſe men of Greece, &c. others with reverſes unknown to the ancients, &c. theſe being modern may be perceived by their being either not ſo bold as thoſe of real antiquity, or not ſo ſoft; another way of diſcovery is by perceiving the ſand, &c. in thoſe that have been caſt from real originals, and then repaired, either the field or the edges will not be ſufficiently round and poliſhed, as the hammered ones are; the weight is another method of diſcovering the falſification. Medals are ſtruck upon extraordinary occaſions by all the princes of Europe, and theſe are called modern ones; the Dutch have been very particular in relating every remarkable tranſaction of theirs by medals, ever ſince their revolt from the Spaniſh yoke.

MEDA'LLION (S.) medals of a very large ſize, ſtruck upon extraordinary occaſions, and preſented by princes to their generals or other great men, as a mark of their favour and eſteem, for their being the inſtrument of performing uncommon exploits, and were never uſed as coin, as the leſſer-ſized medals frequently were.

ME'RCURIES (S.) the ſellers or carriers of news-news-papers from houſe to houſe; alſo the name of thoſe who keep ſhops to receive news papers from the printing offices in large parcels, on purpoſe to diſtribute them to the carriers or hawkers.

ME'RCURY (S.) vulgarly called quickſilver; this name is given by the chymiſts to all liquids that will not take fire, whether ſpirituous, acid, or aqueous; ſome call the ſpirit drawn from plants or animals by this name, and others any acid chymical liquor whatever; it is one of the chymical principles by which they pretend to ſolve the phænomena of nature; with the Heralds, it means the purple colour; with the Aſtronomers, it is the leaſt of all the planets, and loweſt, except the moon, though in ſome ſyſtems he is placed in the ſun's deferent, without any proper orb of his own, only an epicycle, whereby he is ſometimes placed above the ſun, and rendered invifible; experience aſſures us he is never above 28 degrees removed from the ſun, nor Venus above 48, and therefore neither of them can ever make any aſpect with the ſun, but a conjunction, which in truth is none; this planet is of a duſky colour, and but ſeldom ſeen; his mean motion is 59 minutes and 8 ſeconds, but ſometimes ſo ſwift, that he goes a whole degree and 40 minutes in a day; the aſtrologers ſay his nature is various, and participates much with the planet he is with, or beheld by, but that in his own nature he is cold and dry, a great ſtirrer up of winds, and being ſtrong, ſignifies a good wit, or one of a ſubtle, politick, ſtudious, diſpoſition; but when ill dignified, a whimſical, careleſs, troubleſome, prating, lying buffoon, &c. among the Ancients he is called the meſſenger of the gods, and was worſhipped as the deity that immediately preſided over learning, eloquence, and trade; the Greeks call him Hermes, or the interpreter of the will of the gods; he is ſaid to be the inventor of muſick, which others aſcribe to Apollo, and many other things are allowed him, which we have as little to ſay to, as that he was the ſon of Jupiter, begotten upon Maia, &c.

ME'RCY (S.) a virtue that influences or inſpires our minds with compaſſion for the miſeries and misfortunes of our brethren, and inclines us to forgive thoſe who have any ways offended us; in the Scripture Language, thoſe acts of goodneſs beſtowed upon the creature by Almighty God, are called mercies.

MERCY-SEA'T (S.) in the Jewiſh Church, was the covering of the ark of the covenant, or of the holy cheſt, in which the tables of the law were depoſited, made of gold, at the two ends whereof were fixed the two cherubims of the ſame metal, which by their wings extended forward, ſeemed to form a throne for the Majeſty of God, who in ſcripture is repreſented to us as ſitting between the cherubims, and the ark itſelf was as it were his foot ſtool; it was from hence that God gave his oracles to Moſes, or to the high prieſt that conſulted him; in the Eccleſiaſtical-ſtyle of the Chriſtian church, the crown-work or canopy over the altar is called by this name, and ſometimes the confeſſion.

MERETRI'CIOUS (A.) of a luſtful, whoriſh inclination or diſpoſition.

MERI'DIAN (S.) a circle of the ſphere paſſing from north to ſouth, under which all people have noon at the ſame time. Geographers uſe meridians to mark the longitudes, that is, to ſhew how much one place is more eaſt or weſt than another, taking the length of the world from eaſt to weſt; and ſo having a fixed term, they ſettle a firſt meridian, from whence they begin to reckon the longitudes, drawing from weſt to eaſt. Moſt geographers have choſen the Canary iſlands in the weſt of Africa for the firſt meridian; the Dutch make it paſs through the Teneriff iſland and the Cape Verd, and the French through the weſt part of the iſland of Iron more weſterly, as Ptolemy did, which makes a difference of two degrees, 44 minutes. The Portugueſe have ſettled their firſt meridian about 10 degrees beyond that, viz. through Tercera, one of the Azores towards America, becauſe, as they ſay, the needle touched with a load-ſtone, (which varieth and declineth almoſt every where elſe) in Tercera iſland points directly north; from this account the readers of voyages may eaſily perceive that notice muſt be carefully taken of the firſt meridian, or they will make ſtrange work with the ſituation of places in reſpect of eaſt and weſt, and that the matter itſelf is altogether arbitrary; on the globe, it is the graduated braſs circle, in which the globe itſelf turns upon its axis, the top and bottom of which are the repreſentative poles of the world.

Meridian Altitude, is the greateſt height of the ſun, or any ſtar above the horizon of any place, and when the ſun comes to this circle, it is noon or mid-day, and when a ſtar comes to it, it is full ſouth.

MERI'DIONAL (A.) of or belonging to the ſouth, or towards the ſouth.

Meridional Difference, in Navigation, is the difference of longitude between any place a ſhip came from, and now it in.

MERIO'NETHSHIRE (S.) in North-Wales, is exceeding mountainous and rocky, very unpleaſant, and generally inclined to barrenneſs, bearing but thin crops of corn, yet is found to feed good flocks of ſheep and herds of cattle; the mountains are ſo high, that in many places two men may ſtand and diſcourſe together, each upon a ſeparate mountain, but muſt travel ſeveral miles before they can meet; it is well watered with rivers, and ſtored with deer, fowl and fiſh; it is but thinly inhabited, though it lies on the Iriſh ſea ſea for 35 miles in length, and is about 108 in circumference; it contains 37 pariſhes and three market-towns, and ſends one member to parliament; its principal commodity or manufacture is wrought cottons.

ME'RIT (S.) deſert, worth, excellency, or the moral goodneſs of mens actions that deſerve reward; and ſometimes it is applied to puniſhment for ill doing, &c. The School Divines, in their diſputes, have diſtinguiſhed the ſorts of merit, and call one by the name of merit of congruity, which is, when there is no proportion between the reward and the action, but the goodneſs and liberality of the beſtower makes up, and accepts of the deficiency of the action; the other they call merit of condignity, and that is, where the action and reward are proportionable, as a ſervant's wages and his work, &c.

ME'RIT (V.) to deſerve either reward or puniſhment for the good or bad actions that a perſon does.

MERITO'RIOUS (A.) ſomething that deſerves reward or encouragement, &c.

MERITO'RIOUSNESS (S.) deſervingneſs, worthy of reward and encouragement.

ME'SSAGE (S.) the particular buſineſs or errand that any one is ſent about.

ME'SSENGER (S.) a perſon that is ſent from one place and perſon to another to deliver meſſages, or go of errands; there are alſo many officers belonging to the ſtate, that are called by this name, ſome immediately under the command and direction of the ſecretaries of ſtate, that are always in a readineſs to be ſent with a diſpatch, either foreign or domeſtick; they are alſo employed to take up perſons for high treaſon, or other offences againſt the ſtate, with the ſecretaries warrants that do not properly fall under the cognizance of the common law, and which ſometimes are not proper to be publickly known what they are; for which purpoſe the meſſengers houſes are allowed to be made priſons, and the government allows them 6*s*. 8*d*. per day; when they are diſpatched abroad, their travelling allowance is ſtated, viz. to Paris 30 l. to Holland 25 l. to Edinburgh 30 l. to Ireland 30 l. and ſo proportionably for a ſhorter or farther diſtance; there are twenty of them always in waiting, who are relieved monthly and thus diſtributed, four at court, five at each ſecretary's office, two at the third office for North Britain, three at the council-office, and one at the lord chamberlain's; their ſalaries are 45*l. per annum*, and the place is uſually purchaſed for about 300*l.* Beſides theſe, every court of juſtice has officers under this character, and particularly the exchequer, where the four purſuivants go by this name; there is alſo a perſon kept by the ſtate on purpoſe to go and ſearch for, and ſeize treaſonable books and libels in printers or booksellers ſhops or houſes, called in an eſpecial manner the meſſenger of the preſs.

MESSI'AH (S.) properly ſignifies the Anointed, and is principally given to that Sovereign Deliverer that was expected by the Jews, and whom they vainly do expect even to this day, ſince he is already come at the appointed time in the perſon of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. They were uſed to anoint kings, high prieſts, and ſometimes prophets, but this anointing was external, but that of Chriſt was rather ſymbolical and ſpiritual, by the endowment of the mind with ſupernatural wiſdom, power, and ſtrength of the Holy Ghoſt. The ancient prophets had foretold that the true Meſſiah ſhould be God and man, exalted and abaſed, maſter and ſervant, prieſt and victim, king and ſubject, mortal and a conqueror of death, rich and poor, a king, a conquerer, glorious, a man of griefs, involved in infirmities, unknown, in a ſtate of abjection and humiliation, to be born of a virgin, of the tribe of Judah, of the race of David, in the village of Bethlehem; all theſe ſeeming contrarieties were to be fulfilled in the Meſſiah, and evidently were ſo in Jeſus Chriſt, who alſo continues for ever, and who fulfilled every part of the prophecies relating to him; but as the Jews have, ſo they do ſtill deny the ſcriptures to be underſtood in the ſenſe they evidently muſt be, or they can never be fulfilled, as appears from the romantick ſchemes they have invented, and the endleſs impoſtures they are ſubject to by falſe pretenders, who have from time to time ſet themſelves up for the Meſſiah.

MESSIEURS (S.) a French title of civility and honour, now frequently made uſe of for perſons that trade in partnerſhip, whether bankers, mercers, &c. In Learning, ſeveral books are publiſhed under the names of the Meſſieurs de Port Royal, or an accademy, college, or univerſity; all publick ſpeakers, and eſpecially the French lawyers, in their pleadings uſe this term, and is the ſame with our addreſs to the audience, under the title of gentlemen.

ME'SS-MATE (S.) on board of Ship, one that is joined with another in eating.

ME'SSUAGE (S.) the Law term for a dwelling-houſe, with ſome land aſſigned for its uſe; under this character a garden, ſhop, mill, chamber, &c. may be called; but in the Scotch Law, it means the principal dwelling-houſe within any barony, or what we commonly call the manor-houſe.

The ſeveral properties of metals is too large a ſubject for this place, only take notice, that the moſt pure are ſpecifically the heavieſt, and gold is both the moſt ponderous and ductile. In Gunnery, it is not the quality, but the quantity that muſt be regarded, and the manner of caſting the ordnance, as when they ſay the piece is laid under metal, the mouth is lower than the breech, and contrarily, when the mouth is higher than the breech, is is ſaid to be over metal; when point-blank, then it is ſaid to lie right with her metal; and if any part is made thick and ſtrong with metal, it is ſaid to be well-fortified with metal.

METALE'PSIS (S.) a participating, communicating, tranſlating, or explaining; in Oratory, it is the continuing a trope in one word thro' a ſucceſſion of ſignifications.

META'LLICK or ME'TALLINE (A.) partaking of the nature and properties of metal, ſomething like to metal.

ME'TALLIST (S.) a trader or dealer in, or ſtudier of the nature and properties of metals.

META'PHRASIS (S.) a plain, bare, or literal tranſlation of any ſpeech, hiſtory, &c. out of one language into that of another.

ME'TAPHRAST (S.) a verbal or literal tranſlator out of one language into another.

METAPHY'SICAL (A.) abſtracted, above nature or phyſicks.

ME'TAPHYSICKS (S.) the ſcience of abſtract reaſoning, or that which contemplates the exiſtence of things without relation to matter.

META'PTOSIS (S.) in Phyſick, is the changing or degenerating of one diſeaſe into another, as of a quartan ague into a tertian, or of an apoplexy into a palſy, &c.

META'STASIS (S.) is the changing or moving from one place to another, or of a diſeaſe from one part to another, which happens in thoſe perſons who are apoplectick, when the matter which affects the brain is tranſlated to the nerves.

METE (V.) to meaſure.

METE'MPSYCHI (S.) a ſort of hereticks, who in imitation of Pythagoras and the Egyptians, held a tranſmigration of ſouls; this error ſpread very much in the firſt ages of the Chriſtian church.

METEMPSY'CHOSIS (S.) the doctrine of the tranſmigration of the ſoul from one body to another, an old opinion of the philoſophers, and entertained both by the Jews and ſome Chriſtians; the Jewiſh doctors wrap this doctrine up in a myſterious manner, and ſay, that God has deſtined all ſouls a certain degree of perfection, which is not attainable in one life only, and therefore are obliged to return ſeveral times upon the earth, and ſo animate ſeveral bodies ſucceſſively, that they may fulfil all righteouſneſs, and ſo they account for the ſeveral ages that a perſon dies at; this doctrine is ſaid to be performed two ways, the firſt when a ſoul comes into a body already animated, and ſecondly, when it enters into a body newly formed, either to expiate ſome crime it has committed in a former body, or to acquire a greater degree of ſanctity; all the eaſtern nations are much addicted to this opinion. The Chineſe affirm, that Xekiab an Indian philoſopher, who was born about 1000 years before Chriſt, was the firſt that taught this doctrine, and that in the 65th year after Chriſt, that he had been born 8000 times, and that the laſt time he appeared in the form of a white elephant; upon this principle they frequently commit great diſorders, and kill their children when they find themſelves under any difficulty of maintaining them, and are very indifferent about dying; from hence they are ſcrupulous of killing any animal whatever, for fear of violating the ſouls of their fathers or near relations, who may poſſibly inhabit them.

METE'MPTOSIS (S.) a Chronological term for the ſolar equation, neceſſary to prevent the new moon from happening a day too late in the computation.

METEOROLO'GICAL (A.) ſomething relating, belonging, or pertaining to meteors.

MODE (S.) a way, manner or faſhion of dreſs, that obtains at any time or among any people, which commonly is mutable; with the Philoſophers, it is that which determines any thing to be or exiſt in any particular manner, and without which it cannot be at all, and therefore cannot be taken into the mind, without previouſly conceiving ſome ſubſtance for it to exiſt in, as roundneſs cannot be at all conceived, wholly abſtracted from ſomething to exiſt in that way, form, or mode, though there may be a great variety of different things conſidered, exiſting after the ſame way or mode; the general conception of mode is internal and external; the internal are thoſe that inhere in the ſubſtance, as roundneſs in a bowl, crookedneſs in a finger, &c. external are certain adjuncts added to the thing, as clothing to the body, &c.

MO'DEL (S.) the original or pattern by which another thing is made; and this commonly is reſtrained to thoſe ſmall pieces of architecture, that are made to ſhew how a grand building will appear when it is built in the ſame proportion; among the Statuaries, the little figure made in clay to be a guide to their hewing the large figure they are intending to make, is thus called; it is alſo the diameter of the bottom of the ſhaft of a column in any of the orders, from whence all the members of the building are proportioned, and this is commonly divided into 60 parts, called degrees; and this is ſometimes called module.

MO'DEL (V.) is either to make the original, like which another thing is to be made, or to work after or from ſuch an original, or copy that is in miniature, in a much larger building, ſtatue, &c.

MO'DERATE (V.) to appeaſe, temper, qualify, adjuſt, or reconcile differing perſons; to explain the meaning of an aſſertion, poſition, or argument; alſo to abate, leſſen, or make eaſy the charge, fine, mulct, or puniſhment laid upon a perſon.

MO'DESTY or MODESTNESS (S.) that principle of virtue that produces ſobriety, diſcretion, decency, and ſhame-facedneſs of behaviour; the Painters repreſent modeſty as a very beautiful virgin cloathed in blue.

MO'DICUM (S.) a ſmall quantity, or little matter of any thing.

MODIFICA'TION (S.) the act of making or doing any thing in this or that particular manner.

MO'DIFY (V.) to make, do, or endue any thing in this or that manner, or with any particular properties or affections.

MODI'LLION (S.) in Architecture, ſometimes means a ſmall or leſſer meaſure ſubdivided for the convenience of taking parts; and ſometimes ornaments in the cornice of the Ionic, Corinthian, and Compoſite order, being ſmall brackets or conſoles put under the ſoffit or bottom of the drip of the cornice, ſeeming to ſupport the larmier, though in reality they are only ornaments; they ought always to be placed exactly over the middle of the column; they are particularly affected in the Corinthian order, where they are frequently enriched with ſculpture; their form is like an S inverted.

MODI'OLUS (S.) is an inſtrument uſed by Surgeons in profound corruptions, contuſions, cuts, and fractures of bones, and eſpecially in or about the head, made in the form of the ſegment of a cone with a ſaw or teeth filed all round the bottom circle; and thoſe of them that have a center ſpike to ſtick into the ſkull, &c. are called males; and thoſe that have not, are called females; it is improper to uſe this inſtrument, unleſs the chips and prominencies of the bones prick, or the upper table is entire, but depreſſed, and the lower broken, or when the extravaſated blood would choak a man with corruption.

MO'DISH (A.) gay, airy, agreeable to, or following of the preſent manner of dreſs, living, &c.

MO'DULATE (V.) to regulate the ſounds or harmony of a piece of muſick, and to make a regular tranſition from one key to another.

MODULA'TION (S.) the act of turning, warbling, or regulating the voice or inſtrument to perform a piece of muſick harmoniouſly.

MO'DULE (S.) in Architecture, is the ſame with Model, or a ſtanding meaſure from which all the parts are regulated; and this is or may be divided into more or leſs parts, according to the order the building is to be erected in, or the fancy or judgment of the performer.

MOGO'L (S.) is ſometimes taken for the empire or kingdom; called alſo Indoſtan, containing the moſt part of the continent of the Indies; this empire has Tartary on the north, Perſia on the weſt, the river Ganges and ſome mountains on the ſouth, and other mountains on the eaſt; is 650 leagues long from eaſt to weſt, and about 450 from north to ſouth, containing 40 kingdoms, that take their names from the chief towns, of which Agra and Delli are the principal, upon account of the emperor's reſidence; this country is well inhabited near the great rivers, fruitful in corn, rice, millet, lemons, oranges, &c. The people are tawny, having black hair, and love the Europeans; the river Ganges runs through the country from north to ſouth, and being exceeding good and ſweet, the Indians imagine it has the power of ſanctifying, and in conſequence of this opinion, 4 or 500,000 perſons may be ſeen waſhing or bathing in it; ſometimes this term ſignifies the emperor, the feſtival of whoſe birth-day laſts five days, at which time they weigh him, and if he weighs more than he did the year before, they make great rejoicings; after being weighed, he ſits on the richeſt of his thrones, where the lords greet him, and make preſents; the ladies, governors of provinces and towns, ſend their preſents alſo; ſo that in diamonds, rubies, emeralds, gold, ſilver, elephants, &c. he that day receives between two and three millions ſterling.

MO'HAIR (S.) a particular manufacture made of ſilk and hair, generally uſed for the furniture of houſes.

MOIST (A.) damp, ſomething that has a degree of wet in it.

MOI'STEN (V.) to damp, or make wet, to pour water or other liquor in or upon a thing.

MOI'ST-

MOI'STNESS (S.) the being wet or damp, or having a portion of liquor in or upon a thing.

MOI'STURE (S.) wetneſs, dampneſs, or that cold wateriſhneſs that is in the air, or other matter or thing.

MO'LA or MOLE (S.) with the Anatomiſts, is variouſly applied, ſometimes it means a round and broad bone at the jointing of the thigh and leg, where the knee, excepting this bone, is begirt with a membranous ligament, and then they call it patella or rotula; ſometimes it means a fleſhly or ſpungy ſubſtance without bones or bowels, which is often black like concreted blood, and ſometimes extream hard, and this is brought forth by ſome women inſtead of a child, and is then called a moon-calf, or falſe conception, and this ſometimes continues two or three years in the womb, and differs from an embryo, by having no placenta to receive nouriſhment from the mother, but is immediately joined to the womb, and nouriſhed thereby; having a kind of vegetative life, and thereby growing or increaſing in bulk; it is diſtinguiſhed from a true conception by its tremulous, palpitating motion, by its rolling from ſide to ſide, and by the belly's being equally ſwelled every way; the breaſts ſwell as in a true embryo, but are filled not with true milk, but a crude matter; to bring it away, ſometimes violent purgings and bleedings are uſed, and ſometimes emmenagogues; and if theſe fail, then recourſe is had to manual operation, which under this circumſtance is often very dangerous.

MOLA'SSES or MOLO'SSES (S.) the dregs, or groſs, fluid part that remains after boiling ſugar, vulgarly called treacle.

MO'LDER (V.) to crumble, or waſte away, to conſume or fall into duſt or powder.

MOLE (S.) in Military Architecture, is a pier or very large piece of maſonry, conſiſting of great ſtones thrown into the ſea in manner of a bank, with deſign to ſhut up a port, and defend the veſſels from the impetuoſity of the waves, and to prevent the paſſage of any veſſel without leave; ſometimes it means a harbour; among the Romans, it was uſed ſometimes for a mauſoleum, built in the manner of a round tower, or a ſquare baſe, inſulate, encompaſſed with columns, and covered with a dome. The mole of the emperor Adrian, now the caſtle of St. Angelo, was the greateſt and moſt ſtately of all others; it was crowned with a brazen pine-apple, wherein was a golden urn containing the emperor's aſhes; alſo a ſpot or mark in the ſkin, ſometimes lying even with it, or flat upon it, and ſometimes protuberant above the ſurface thereof; alſo the name of a creature with a very black and ſmooth fur, that chiefly lives within the ſurface of the earth, or under ground.

MOLE'ST (V.) to trouble, interrupt, vex, diſquiet, grieve, or perplex.

MOLESTA'TION (S.) any kind of trouble, hindrance, vexation, or diſturbance.

MO'LINISTS (S.) the followers of Molina, a Spaniſh Jeſuit, reader of the divinity lectures 20 years in the univerſity of Evora in Portugal, who died at Madrid in 1604, aged 65 years, who in his book of the conſiſtency of grace with free-will, gave riſe to the diſputes upon the ſubject of grace and predeſtination, which has made ſo great a noiſe in the world, eſpecially by the oppoſition of the Dominicans, who not only maintained publick theſes, but alſo preferred an information againſt it, to the inquiſition at Valladolid, and alſo to the ſame tribunal in the kingdom of Caſtile. The cauſe was afterwards carried to Rome, where pope Clement VIII. erected the congregation de Auxiliis in 1597, when after ſeveral meetings of the cardinals, and others called in for conſultation, the Dominicans and Jeſuits were heard before the pope and congregation; after theſe hearings, the diſpute continued to the pontificate of Paul V. when the divines called in for advice, being againſt Molina's doctrine, a bull was drawn up againſt it; but the pope refuſed to ſign it, and diſmiſſed the diſputants, Auguſt 31, 1607, by acquainting them he would publiſh his deciſion when he thought proper, prohibiting the parties in the mean time, from ſtigmatizing each other, and enjoining the ſuperiors of both orders, to puniſh thoſe ſeverely who ſhould contravene this prohibition.

MOLI'TION (S.) a grinding, breaking, or making ſmall.

MO'LLIENT (A.) ſoftening, mollifying, aſſuaging, allaying the heat of an inflammation in the body, or anger in the mind.

MO'LLIFYING (S.) ſoftening, aſſuaging, appeaſing, reconciling.

MOLOCH, MO'LECH, MI'LCOLM, or ME'LCOLM (S.) a god of the Ammonites. Moſes, in ſeveral places, forbids the Iſraelites to dedicate their children to Moloch, by making them paſs through the fire in honour of that god; thoſe who offended were to be put to death for their crime, and God threatens all thoſe guilty very ſeverely; from this precaution, and from what they afterwards were guilty of, it looks as if they had been accuſtomed to this idolatry while in Egypt. Solomon built a temple to Moloch upon the mount of Olives, and Manaſſeh long after imitated his impiety, by making his ſon paſs through the fire in honour of Moloch. It was chiefly in the valley of Tophet and Hinnom, to the eaſt of Jeruſalem that this idolatry was committed; commentators imagine that their children leaped or jumped over a fire ſacred to Moloch, and by this luſtration to purify them, it being a uſual ceremony upon other occaſions among the Pagans, though others think they actually burnt their children in ſacrifice in honour of this falſe deity. The rabbins aſſure us that the idol Moloch was made of braſs, ſitting upon a throne of the ſame metal, adorned with a royal crown, having the head of a calf, and his arms extended, as if to embrace any one; when they deſigned to offer any children to him, they heated the ſtatue within with a great fire, and when it was exceeding hot, they put the miſerable victim within his arms, which was ſoon conſumed by the violence of the heat; and that the cries of the children might not be heard, they made a great noiſe with drums and other inſtruments; ſome alledge that Moloch was the ſame with Saturn, to whom human victims were alſo offered; others that it was Mercury, Venus, or Mars.

MO'LTEN (A.) any thing melted, caſt, or run by the founder.

MO'LTING or MOU'LTING (S.) a ſhedding or caſting of feathers, hair, ſkin, horns, &c. which to moſt creatures happens annually.

MOME (S.) a dull, blockiſh, heavy fellow.

MO'MENT (S.) conſidered as applied to Time, is the leaſt portion or part that can be imagined, and uſually is called an inſtant; when conſidered and applied to the new doctrines of infinites, are infinitely ſmall parts of quantity, or generative principles of magnitude, being conſidered as having no determined magnitude of their own, but only inceptive thereof; in Mechanicks, it is the ſame with impetus, or quantity of motion in any moving body; and ſometimes it is uſed ſimply for the motion itſelf; ſometimes it is applied to the power by which moving bodies continually change place.

MOMENTA'NEOUS or MO'MENTARY (A.) ſomething of very ſhort duration, or that laſts a very ſmall time.

MOME'NTOUS (A.) of great conſequence, concern, value, or worth.

MO'MUS (S.) the god of jeſting, among the Poets, (who fancied himſelf the ſon of ſleep by the night) he did nothing elſe but examine the actions and words of gods and men, on purpoſe to rebuke and deride them; the fable ſays, that being choſen by Neptune, Vulcan, and Minerva, to give his judgment concerning the excellency of their works, he blamed them all: Neptune, becauſe he made not his bull with horns before his eyes, or on his ſhoulders, to ſtrike more ſurely or ſtrongly; Minerva, for building a houſe that could not be removed in caſe of bad neighbours; and Vulcan for making a man without a little window in his breaſt, that his ill deſigns and treacheries might be ſeen; from him all carpers and over-nice criticks are called Momuſſes. The Painters repreſent him in a darkiſh-coloured robe, and his beard and hair party-coloured.

MO'NACHAL (A.) ſomething belonging to the ſtate or condition of a monk.

MO'NACHISM (S.) the ſtate or condition of the monks.

MONA'RCHICAL (A.) belonging, or according to the laws, manners, and cuſtoms of a monarchy.

MO'NARCHY (S.) any large ſtate or kingdom governed by one magiſtrate, in whom the ſupream power is lodged; and this is ſometimes abſolute, containing both the legiſlative and executive power; and this is commonly called an arbitrary government, ſuch as France, &c. now is; and ſometimes it is tempered by the interpoſition of the eſtates or great men of the kingdom, both among the nobility, gentry, and commonalty; and this is called a mixed monarchy, as in England, where the legiſlative power is in the hands of the ſtates or parliament, and the executive power is veſted in the king or monarch abſolutely; only it is to be noted the king has a negative power in laws propoſed to be obligatory upon the people; and he has likewiſe the power of diſſolving, proroguing, and ſummoning the parliament, but no power to raiſe money otherwiſe than by virtue of the laws conſented to by parliament. The general diviſion of the old chronology is regulated by the four grand or univerſal Monarchies, viz. the Aſſyrian, Perſian, Grecian and Roman, though ſome reckon but two, viz. the Babylonian and Roman; the general cuſtom of monarchies is to be ſucceſſive from father to ſon, &c. but there are ſome where they are elective, as Poland, &c. yet the moſt abſolute monarchies have many inſtances of the ſucceſſion's not being hereditary.

MONASTE'RIAL (A.) ſomething relating or belonging to a monaſtery.

MO'NASTERIES (S.) are properly cells for ſingle, ſolitary monks, but afterwards the cenobia, or houſes for religious fraternities were ſo called; they were firſt introduced into great cities in the weſt by Euſebius biſhop of Vercelles; St. Baſil in the 4th century, had down regulations for thoſe ſocieties in the eaſt, and St. Benett, in the 6th century, in the weſt, which order was ſubdivided into a great many branches; at firſt monaſteries were places of ſtrict diſcipline and auſterity, and publick ſchools for the inſtruction and education of youth; formerly the biſhops palaces were called monaſteries, into which the people ſometimes retired from the world, that they might have the better opportunities to read and expound the ſcriptures, and inſtruct young people in piety and good principles; during the ravages of the Goths and Vandals, the Huns, Franks, and Almains, monaſteries were the only ſanctuaries for all ſorts of learning and learned men, from whence iſſued forth great numbers of perſons excellently qualified both to govern and convert, which as neceſſarily gained them the eſteem of all ranks and degrees of people, and princes gave them great indulgences and privileges, they as well as their ſubjects receiving their education from them, till about the year one thouſand, when univerſities and colleges for learning the ſciences only were erected, and the monaſteries were more confined to religious obſervations and reſtrictions than formerly, ſo that ſomewhat of their eſteem was eclipſed till about the 13th century, when the Mendicant friars endeavoured to reſtore their former reputation, by mixing philoſophy and ſchool-divinity along with their other performances; ſome were called monaſteries royal, upon account of their being endowed by the munificence of kings, which by degrees grew ſo big, as to be exempt both from epiſcopal and patriarchal juriſdiction, and ſubject only to royal or imperial viſitations; the abbots or heads being formerly choſe by kings or emperors, or at leaſt by their direction, and being immediately endowed out of the crown-lands, were obliged to ſerve the prince in his wars.

MONA'STICAL or MONA'STICK (A.) belonging to, or after the manner of a convent, cloiſter, monk, or nun.

MO'NDAY (S.) the ſecond day of the week, according to the Chriſtian computation, or the firſt working-day.

MO'NEY or MO'NY (S.) pieces of metal generally coined or ſtamped with the head of ſome prince, king, &c. on the one ſide, and the arms of the ſtate or kingdom on the reverſe, with ſome motto round it; and this is commonly gold or ſilver of a certain determinate fineneſs, whereby other nations may be enabled truly to adjuſt the value thereof in proportion to their own; theſe coins thus made, are, as it were, the ſtandards for all other commodities, they being rated at ſo many crowns, pieces of $\frac{8}{9}$ pounds, &c. and though this way of traffick has been long in uſe, and the ſcripture often ſpeaks of gold, ſilver and braſs, of certain ſums of money, of purchaſes made with money, of money of a certain weight, &c. yet it is ſuppoſed this was not coined or ſtamped money, but only gold and ſilver in maſs, or ſmall lumps in pieces, which was taken by weight, and valued according to its purity, for the ancient way of commerce was by barter; the moderns have introduced copper money for the advantage of change, and where gold and ſilver is ſcarce, as in Sweden, where a dollar copper mint is as big as a common-ſized plate, which in ſilver would be about the ſize of our half-crown; beſides the real money that every people or nation have current among them, there is an imaginary money or money of accompt, to which the real have relation.

MO'NEY'D (A.) wealthy, rich, poſſeſſed of, or ſtored with money.

MONTGO'MERYSHIRE (S.) one of the northern counties in Wales, very hilly and mountainous, but interlaced with fertile valleys, both for tillage and paſturage, and formerly much noted for a good breed of horſes; it is part of the dioceſe of St. Aſaph, Bangor and Hereford; it is about 94 miles in circumference, contains 5660 houſes, about 40,000 inhabitants, 47 pariſhes, and ſix market-towns, and ſends two members to parliament; the vales and meadows upon the banks of the Severn are rendered exceeding fruitful, by being overflowed by it, which at the retiring of the waters, leave it covered with a thick ſlime, which is beyond all the manure that art can invent.

MONTH (S.) is a certain portion of time that is reckened, ſometimes from the motion of the moon, and ſometimes not; antiently, the Jews had no particular names for their months, but called them the firſt, ſecond, third, &c. though Moſes uſes the name Abib, or the month of the new ears of corn, or of the new fruits, and which the Jews afterwards called Niſan, and which was the firſt of the holy year. In Solomon's Time, the ſecond month was called Sio or Ziſ, which was afterwards called Jiar; but theſe names were afterwards all loſt, and after the captivity of Babylon they took the names of the months as they found them among the Chaldeans and Perſians; and they had two manners of reckoning, one contained the names of the Hebrew months according to the order of the holy year, thus;

1. Niſan anſwering to our	March
2. Jiar	April
3. Savan	May
4. Thammuz	June
5. Ab	July
6. Elul	Auguſt
7. Tizri	September
8. Marſchevan	October
9. Caſleu	November
10. Thebet	December
11. Sebat	January
12. Adar	February.

The other according to the civil year, thus;

1. Tizri anſwering to our	September
2. Marſchevan	October
3. Caſleu	November
4. Thebet	December
5. Sebat	January
6. Adar	February
7. Niſan	March
8. Jiar	April
9 Savan	May
10. Thammuz	June
11. Ab	July

The months were lunar, tho' the year was ſolar, that is, the firſt was of 30 days, and the ſecond of 29, and ſo alternately; they made the month to begin at the time when the moon began to appear, for which purpoſe people were kept to watch its firſt appearance, which was proclaimed by the ſound of the trumpet; to make the time of the months agree with the year, every three years a month was added, called the ſecond Adar; but the preſent European months are ſomewhat different, being of unequal lengths; and once in four years a day is added to February, to make the civil computation of time agree with the ſun's true motion, which it does very nearly. A philoſophical month, with the Chymiſts, conſiſts of forty days and nights.

MOON (S.) in Aſtronomy, is one of the heavenly bodies, vulgarly ranked among the planets, but properly is only a ſatellite or ſecondary planet; ſhe is an attendant of our earth, which ſhe reſpects as her center, and is conſtantly found in her neighbourhood; and as all the other planets move primarily round the ſun, ſo the moon moves round the earth; her orbit is an ellipſis, in which ſhe is retained by the force of gravity, performing her revolution round us in 27 days, 7 hours, 43 minutes, which is alſo the exact time of her rotation round her axis; her mean diſtance from the earth is 62 ſemi-diameters and a half of the earth, or 240,000 miles; the diameter of the moon to the earth is, as 11 to 40.2, or 2170 miles; the phænomena of the moon are very many, ſometimes ſhe is increaſing, ſometimes decreaſing, ſometimes horned, ſometimes ſemi-circular, ſometimes gibbous, and ſometimes full or globular; ſometimes ſhe lights us the whole night, and at other times but part of it; ſometimes ſhe is in the ſouthern hemiſphere, and at other times in the northern one; the ſource of theſe variations is her being a dark, opake, and ſpherical body, which ſhines with the light ſhe receives from the ſun, from whence only that halt that is next to the ſun is enlightened. The poets have feigned ſtrange ſtories about the moon; and the ancients went ſo far into the whimſies, as to be guilty of idolatry, by paying divine honours to the moon; the Orientals in general, and the Hebrews in particular, paid more reſpect to the moon than to the ſun; the Jews worſhipped her under the name of Meni or Aſtarte, or goddeſs of the groves, of the queen of heaven, &c. the Syrians under the name of Aſtarte, Urania, or Celeſtis; the Arabians by Alilat; the Egyptians by Iſis; the Greeks by Diana, Venus, Juno, Hecate, Bellona, Minerva, &c. Among the Heralds, the moon is always borne increaſing or decreaſing, and never in the full; among the Divines, the moon is the hieroglyphick of the Chriſtian church, who comparing Jeſus Chriſt to the ſun, compare the church to the moon, as receiving all its beauty and ſplendor from him; it is alſo made the repreſentative of an unſteady or fickle-minded perſon.

MOSCHE'TTOS or MOSKI'TTOS (S.) a ſmall Indian nation on the north ſide of the continent of America, near Cape Gracia Dios, who are ſo dextrous in throwing and avoiding all ſorts of darts, that they will defend themſelves from being hurt, though their enemies throw them very thick; they are generally very kind to the Engliſh, and have no form of government among them, but own the king of England for their ſovereign, and learn and uſe the Engliſh language, eſteeming the governor of Jamaica as one of the greateſt princes in the world; alſo a very troubleſome ſmall inſect that afflicts the Weſt Indies, by ſtinging them very ſeverely.

MOSKS or MOSQUES (S.) the name given to thoſe publick places where the Mahometans met to offer up their publick devotions; they are ſaid to be all built ſquare, with good ſtones; before the principal gate, there is a ſquare court payed with white marble, and low galleries round about, whoſe roof is ſupported with marble columns, where the Turks waſh wash themselves before they go into the mosque, even in the middle of winter, they being furnished with a pool and several cocks, for that purpose; the walls are all white, except some places where God's name is written in large Arabick characters. In each mosque, there is a great number of lamps, and betwixt the lamps hang many chrystal rings, ostriches eggs, and other curiosities sent out of foreign countries, which make a fine shew when the lamps are lighted; about every mosque, there are six high towers, each having three little open galleries, one above another; both the towers and mosques are covered with lead, adorned with gildings and other ornaments, and are all called minarets; from thence instead of a bell, men called muezins, call the people to prayer; each mosque has generally an hospital, where all travellers, of what religion or nation soever they be, are entertained for three days; every mosque has a place called Turbe, which is the burying-place of its founders: within it is a tomb six or seven foot long, covered with a large velvet or green sattin covering; at each end are two candlesticks, and two wax tapers, with many seats round about for those that read the Alcoran for the soul of the deceased. It is unlawful to enter a mosque with shoes or stockings on, therefore they cover the pavement with stuffs sewed like fillets a small distance one from another; the mosques are full of them, and each fillet may hold a row of men kneeling, sitting, or prostrated, according to the times of their ceremonies. It is not lawful for women to enter into a mosque, and so they stay in the porches without. They have neither altars nor images, but when they pray, they turn themselves towards Mecca, where Mahomet's tomb is; and as most Roman Catholick churches have the cross upon the top of them, so the Mahometans have a crescent or half-moon, being the arms of their empire, upon their mosques.

MOSS (S.) a plant of the parasite kind, growing on the barks, &c. of several trees, the tops of walls, and heathy or barren grounds; also the fine, greenish, silky, or downy matter that grows upon dead mens skulls, is called moss.

MO'TION (S.) in Natural Philoſophy, ſignifies any change of place, of which there are great varieties, as circular, direct, violent, ſwift, ſlow, &c. alſo an impulſe or ſtrong inclination excited in the mind to do or forbear any thing; in Law, it is deſiring leave of a court to bring on or diſcontinue, &c. a ſuit; in War, the ſeveral marches, countermarches, &c. an army makes, or changing of its poſt for better ground, to force or avoid an enemy, &c. are called its motions; in Muſick, it is the manner of playing ſlow or quick, according to the nature of the compoſition; among the Clock or Watch-makers, it is the inſide of any time-piece. The famous Sir Iſaac Newton has built his philoſophy upon three principles, now commonly called the laws of motion, and by others the laws of nature, viz. 1. That every body will continue its ſtate, either of reſt or motion uniformly forward in a direct line, unleſs it be compelled to change that direction, or ceaſe from that motion or reſt, by ſome force impreſſed upon it. 2. That the change of motion is in proportion to the moving force impreſſed upon it, and is always according to the direction of that right line, in which the force is impreſſed. 3. That action and re-action are equal and contrary the one to the other.

MO'TIVE (S.) any reaſon or inducement upon which a perſon does or forbears the doing of any thing.

MO'VEABLE (A.) that may be changed, altered, or put from one place to another.

Moveable Feaſts, are thoſe which the church has appointed to be obſerved on the ſame day of the week, but not always upon the ſame day of the month, but in different years are on different days, and alſo different months, of which kind, beſides Eaſter and Whitſuntide, &c. are all the Lord's days or Sundays in the year, whereof many being called by particular ſtrange names in our common almanacks, I will here explain, and begin with the year: If there be any Sundays between the Circumciſion of our Lord, commonly called New-Year's-day, and Twelfth-day, called alſo the Epiphany, from the appearance of the ſtar to the wiſe men, ſuch Sunday has no name in particular aſſigned to it; but the Sundays following the Epiphany are called the 1, 2, 3, &c. Sundays after the Epiphany, which are ſometimes more, and ſometimes fewer, as Eaſter falls high or low, for they muſt be ended, and give place to Septuageſima, which is always the tenth Sunday incluſively before Eaſter; the Sunday following is called Sexageſimo; the next after Quinquageſimo, called alſo Dominica Bacchanaliorum, from the licentious practices of ſome perſons both formerly and ſtill, this week, or before the beginning of Lent, the firſt day, with us called Aſh-Wedneſday, being the Wedneſday in this week, ſo called from the humble poſture of ſitting cloathed in ſackcloth with aſhes on the head; the next Sunday is called Quadrageſima, or the firſt Sunday in Lent, called alſo Invocavit; the ſecond Reminiſcere; the third Oculi; the fourth Lætare, from the ſeveral portions of ſcripture uſed in the offices of thoſe days; ſome call this laſt Dominica Roſa, becauſe then the pope holds a golden roſe in his hand before all the people, and this with us is called Midlent-Sunday; the fifth is called Judica, from Pſalm xliii. 1. Judge me, O God, and plead my Cauſe; the next is Palm-Sunday, from the palm-branches which the people ſtrewed before our Saviour at his entering into Jeruſalem; then comes Eaſter-Sunday, celebrated in memory of our Saviour's reſurrection, and this is the foundation and rule for all moveable feaſts; after this follow the Quinquageſimal, or ſpace of 50 days between Eaſter and Whitſuntide, all which the primitive Chriſtians obſerved as one continual feſtival, containing ſix Sundays; the firſt Quaſi modo Geniti, from 1 Pet. ii. 2. it is alſo called Dominica in Albis, becauſe thoſe that were baptized at Eaſter, uſed to go in white garments all the week, which this day at night they left off; the ſecond Sunday is called Miſericordia; the third Jubilate; the fourth Cantate; the fifth Vocem Jucunditatis, from the ſeveral portions of ſcripture beginning ſo, &c. this laſt is, among Us, called Rogation-Sunday, and the whole week Rogation-week, becauſe they then made their proceſſions into the fields, ſaid the Litany, made their prayers and requeſts queſts (rogationes) to God publickly; the Thurſday in this week is called Holy Thurſday, or Aſcenſion-Day, kept in memory of our Saviour's aſcenſion into heaven; the laſt is called Exaudi, from Pſal. xxvii. then ſucceeds the grand feaſt called by us Whitſuntide or Penteceſt, becauſe people uſed to appear in white cloaths, which, as it was obſerved by the Jews in memory of the promulgation of the law at mount Sinai, juſt fifty days after their paſſover, ſo the Chriſtians obſerve it the ſeventh Sunday after Eaſter, in commemoration of the Holy Ghoſt's being then ſent down upon the apoſtles, who were thereby endowed with the gift of tongues, prophecy, &c. the Sunday following is called Trinity-Sunday, and from thence the Sundays are reckoned in order, as 1ſt, 2d, 3d, &c. after Trinity to the firſt Sunday in Advent, which is a time of preparation for the grand feſtival of Chriſtmas, or Chriſt's nativity, and contains the four Sundays next before, which are called the 1ſt, 2d, &c. Sundays in Advent.

Moveable Signs, with the Aſtrologers, are what are called the cardinal ſigns, viz. Aries, Cancer, Libra, and Capricorn, ſo called becauſe they are arguments of the motions of times, or from which mutations the ſeaſons of ſpring, ſummer, autumn, winter, are made.

MUSE (S.) a thoughtful, ſtudious diſpoſition; alſo the being in a ſtudy or contemplation upon any thing, matter, or ſubject, to be as it were wholly taken up with inward thoughts, and not any ways regardful of external objects.

MUSE (V.) to contemplate, ſtudy, or think very attentively upon any matter or buſineſs.

MU'SES (S.) certain goddeſſes among the ancients, the reputed daughters of Jupiter and Mnemoſyne, nine in number, to whom the invention of ſciences is attributed, particularly the various ſorts of poetry, called by the names of Clio, Urania, Calliope, Euterpe, Erato, Thalia, Melpomene, Terpſychore, and Polyhymnia; ſome call them the daughters of Cœlus and the Earth, that expreſs the qualities of the body and ſpirit for ſciences; they were at firſt but three, viz. Meditation, Memory and Singing; but a certain carver having orders to make three ſtatues of the then three Muſes for the temple of Apollo, made three of each, which being very curious workmanſhip, they were all ſet up, and from thence reckoned nine, and had accordingly the above names applied to them, and each a diſtinct branch of ſcience given her as the inventreſs.

MUSE'UM (S.) a place of Alexandria in Egypt, like the prytaneum of Athens, where learned men of extraordinary merit were maintained by the publick, becauſe of their conſiderable ſervices to the common-wealth, alſo any ſtudy or library, college or publick place of reſort; and in particular a noble building at Oxford, the lower part of which is a chymical laboratory, and the upper a repoſitory for natural and artificial rarities.

MU'SHROOM or MU'SHROON (S.) a plant that has neither ſeeds nor flowers, of which there are a great many various ſorts, all called by the general name of funguſſes; of theſe ſome are extravagantly ſmall, and others ſo large, as to be a chariot load; nothing in Botany is more occult than this plant, nor nothing more curious; the manner of cultivation is as peculiar as the plant itſelf, and the conjectures of the learned as numerous as the ſorts of the plant.

MU'SICAL (A.) ſomething belonging or appertaining to muſick, harmonious, pleaſant ſounding, &c.

MU'SICK (S.) is that art which teaches how to form concords, and bring agreeable ſounds to the ear; and this is performed by certain mathematical rules or proportions, found out by various experiments, and at laſt reduced to a demonſtrative ſcience, ſo far as relates to the tones and intervals of ſounds only, ſo that indeed muſick is nothing elſe but the agreement, apt proportion, and mixture of acute, grave, and mixed ſounds, but is conſidered under many diſtinctions, and ſometimes it is applied to the tone of voice uſed by orators, players, ſingers, &c. ſometimes to the making or compoſing pieces for inſtrumental performances; ſometimes to the harmony and agreement between friends, &c. it is ſometimes practical, and ſometimes ſpeculative, &c. The invention of the ſcience, properly ſo called, or the performance upon muſical inſtruments, is very ancient, being earlier than the flood; for Jubal is ſaid to be the father, or firſt teacher of thoſe that handled the harp or organ; ſome of the heathens attribute the invention to Pythagoras, and ſay he took the hint of a diateſſeron, a diapente, and a diapaſon, from the beating of hammers in a ſmith's ſhop. The poets make Mercury and Apollo the firſt muſicians; the preſent ſcale or gamut now uſed was invented by one Guido, an abbot, about 700 years ago; the uſe and deſign of this art is to recreate and compoſe the mind, and to allay and excite the paſſions; of the extraordinary effects of practical muſick, both profane and ſacred hiſtory are [illegible] with accounts and examples, for which reaſon the ſolemnities of all religions have been performed with the ſound of proper inſtruments; the Heathens, the Jews, and the Chriſtians, have added the human voice to the artificial ſounds, to make their ſervice the more affecting and grand.

MU'SING (S.) thinking, pauſing, ſtudying, or meditating.

MUSK (S.) a very ſtrong perfume, and no ways pleaſant, unleſs duly tempered by other mixtures or perfumes; the vulgar notion that it comes from, or is the teſticles of the beaſt called a caſtor, is a miſtake, it being found in a kind of bag or tumour, growing about the bigneſs of a hen's egg under the belly, towards the genital parts of a beaſt called a muſk, which upon ſtrict examination, is found to be only a quantity of blood there congealed, and almoſt corrupted, which occaſions it to caſt forth a ſtrong, putrid ſmell.

MU'SKET or MU'SQUET (S.) a light ſort of fire-arms carried by the ſoldiers upon their ſhoulders when in a march, and formerly uſed to be diſcharged by a match, but now by a fire-lock; they are ſized to three feet eight inches, from the muzzel to the fire-pan or touch-hole, and of a bore ſo as to carry a ball of about an ounce weight; they are the moſt convenient and common ſort of fire arms uſual in war, upon account of their eaſy portability, eſpecially ſince the late improvements of locks and bayonets being added to them, which renders them both offenſive and defenſive, as well againſt the horſe as the foot; whereas before, one third of every company was obliged to carry pikes to keep off the horſe; the length of the line of defence is ſettled by the diſtance a muſket will do execution, which is accounted about 240 yards, according to which all the works are proportioned.

MU'SKET-BASKET (S.) in War, are baſkets that are from 12 to 18 inches high, and 8 or 10 diameter at the bottom, and 12 at the top, ſo that theſe being filled with earth, there is room to lay a muſket between them at bottom, being ſet on low breaſt-works or parapets, or upon ſuch as are beaten down.

MUSKETIE'RS or MUSQUETEE'RS (S.) thoſe ſoldiers in every regiment of foot that carry a muſket; in France there are two companies, or rather troops, called moſquetaires du roy, compoſed all of gentlemen excellently mounted, who ſerve either a-foot or horſe-back, and ſignalize themſelves upon all deſperate occaſions, being there only for preferment; the king himſelf is their captain, and the officer commanding each of them is called captain-lieutenant; yet each of them commands as colonel, both of horſe and foot, and accordingly takes place of all younger colonels of either; they are reckoned as gendarmes, and march next to the Scotch gendarmes; there are 250 in each company; the firſt company or troop uſed to be called great muſketeers; they rode on white horſes, and had a gold galloon upon their hats; the ſecond troop ride on black horſes, and have ſilver lace on their hats.

MUSKETOO'N (S.) a ſhort fire-arm with a very large bore, to carry ſeveral muſket or piſtol bullets at once, and therefore proper to fire among a crowd, or to keep a paſs; it is ſometimes called a blunderbuſs.

MU'STY (A.) an ill ſcent or ſmell of ſomething that is ſpoiled, by being kept too long.

MUTABI'LITY or MU'TABLENESS (S.) the ſtate or condition of any thing that does, or may vary or change its preſent ſtate, reſolution, or condition often, or eaſily.

MU'TABLE (A.) any thing that changes, or may be changed eaſily and often.

MUTA'TION (S.) is changing from one ſtate or condition to another, whether naturally or accidentally.

MUTE (S.) in Grammar, is a letter that is not ſounded or heard in the pronunciation, or a letter that produces no ſound of itſelf without adding a vowel to it; in our Alphabet, B, C, D, G, J, K, P, Q, T, Y, are called mutes; and a perſon that is naturally dumb, or whoſe tongue is cut out, or that reſtrains or forbears ſpeaking wilfully or by choice; and this is ſometimes practiſed at the funeral pomp of ſome great perſons, who have mutes ſtanding about the corpſe to make the ſolemnity the more awful; alſo certain perſons in the grand ſeignior's court, whoſe tongues are cut out, and who are executioners of the emperor's diſpleaſure upon baſhaws, &c. In Law, a priſoner may be mute two manner of ways, 1. When he ſtands mute without ſpeaking of any thing, and then it ſhall be enquired, whether he ſtood mute out of malice, or by the act of God; if the latter, then the judge of the court, ex officio, ought to enquire, whether he be the ſame perſon, and of all other pleas which he might have pleaded if he had not ſtood mute. 2. When he pleads not guilty, or doth not directly anſwer, or will not put himſelf upon the inqueſt to be tried by God and his country. If a man wilfully ſtand mute, he ſhall be put to his penance, if in caſe of an appeal, he ſhall be hanged; if in caſe of treaſon, he ſhall be drawn and hanged. The Aſtrologers call Cancer, Scorpio and Piſces, mute ſigns; and in Nativities, they ſay when the ſignificators are therein, they ſpoil or cauſe ſome ſome impediment in the native's ſpeech; it is alſo the dung or ordure of birds.

MUTE (A.) dumb, ſilent, that does not or cannot ſpeak or anſwer, when a queſtion is aſked, &c.

MUTE (V.) to dung as birds do; and in the Law, when a criminal refuſes to plead, he is ſaid to ſtand mute.

MU'TILATE (V.) to maim, cut or break off part of a perſon or thing, as in Carving, to break off a leg, arm, &c. of a ſtatue, &c. alſo to caſtrate perſons to make them eunuchs, to attend in the ſeraglio's of the eaſtern princes, &c. a practice alſo in Italy, to make the males ſing finely.

MYRO'BALANS (S.) a medicinal fruit brought from the Indies, but nothing near ſo much in repute now as formerly, and by ſome imagined not to be the ſame the antients ſo much praiſed; there are five ſorts of them, of different colours and ſhapes, and all of them in general of the ſame quality, being ſlightly purgative and aſtringent.

MYRRH (S.) a ſort of gum, which comes from a ſhrub that is common in Arabia, of about five cubits high, of a hard wood, the trunk of which is defended by thorns, ſometimes of itſelf, and ſometimes by inciſion; it was anciently employed in perfumes, and embalming dead bodies, &c. The beſt is cleaneſt, rough, light, and breaks eaſily, ſmells ſweet, taſtes bitter and hot, whoſe quality is to heat, diſpoſe to reſt, and is good in cold diſeaſes of the head, and ſeveral other phyſical purpoſes; it was anciently uſed in ſacrifices and religious offerings and dedications, as appears in ſeveral parts of the ſcripture: The magi, or wiſe men of the Eaſt, that came to worſhip our Saviour, preſented him with gold, frankincenſe, and myrrh.

MY'RTLE (S.) a ſhrub very common in Spain, though this name is ſometimes taken for the flowers, and ſometimes for the perfume extracted from the eſſence of it, and ſometimes for the berries or fruit of it; they are much uſed in medicine, eſpecially by the French phyſicians, they making oils, ſyrups, &c. from them; the perfumers extract an eſſence or perfume from the leaves and flowers, and the dyers of Germany make a blue tinge or colour from it; and in England, the leaves and branches are uſed in tanning.

MY'STAGOGUE (S.) one that employs himſelf to explain the ſeeming romantickneſs of religious matters, by endeavouring to ſhew in what ſenſe the many ſtrange expreſſions found both in the Heathen, Jewiſh, and Chriſtian theology, are or may be underſtood or practiſed.

MYSTE'RIOUS (A.) hidden, dark, difficult, hard to find out, &c.

MY'STERY (S.) ſomething hidden or concealed, or difficult to find out, or come at; and this may be applied to civil, religious or ſcientifick matters; all religions, true or falſe, have certain myſteries or ſecrets, known only to thoſe who have been initiated into them; the Pagans were generally thoſe that no one ought ever to have known, being frequently actors of impurity and diſhonour, both to God and human nature; the ſcriptures frequently ſpeak of the infamous myſteries of Aſtarte, Adonis and Priapus, where the moſt ſhameful crimes were committed under the veil of religion; the religion of the Jews was full of myſteries, the whole of it being but a myſterious or typical repreſentation of the Chriſtian religion, that was to follow it; in the Chriſtian Religion, there are alſo myſteries, as the incarnation of the Word, or Son, his hypoſtatical union with the human nature, his miraculous birth, his death, reſurrection and aſcenſion, &c. ſometimes the word is applied to ſecrets that God has reſerved to himſelf, as the fore-knowledge of future events, &c. So the ſtrange properties of figures in geometry, and numbers in arithmetick, &c. are called myſteries.

MY'STICK (A.) ſomething belonging to a ſecret or myſtery, ſtrange, unknown, wonderful.

MYTHOLOGI'ZE (V.) to explain, apply or moralize fables or the romantick account of the Heathen religion.

MYTHO'LOGY (S.) the hiſtory and explanation of the fabulous deities, &c. of the ancients, or old Pagan religion.

MYU'RUS (S.) a pulſe that grows weaker or fainter by degrees.

N,

IS the thirteenth letter in the Engliſh alphabet, and by thoſe who have divided the whole into proper claſſes, is called a liquid conſonant; the Greeks, Romans and Hebrews frequently ſound the following letter double: and omit the n, eſpecially before, p, b and m, as, in ædo illudo, inrigo irrigo, &c. Among the Ancients, this letter was a numeral, ſignifying 900, and when a line or daſh was over the head of it, thus, $\overline{N}$, 9000; the Roman lawyers uſed N. L. for non liquet, to ſignify that the evidence againſt any criminal was not ſufficient to acquit or condemn him, being much the ſame with ignoramus among us; the Ancients put in between e and s, to ſoften the pronunciation, as quotiens for quoties; we have a common contraction received from the Romans, viz. N. B. meaning, obſerve, or note well, mind, take heed, or be careful what you ſay or do, or of what has been, or is going to be ſaid or done, &c.

NAB (S.) the cant name either for the head itſelf, or for a hat, cap, or other head covering.

NAB (V.) to arreſt, take by ſurprize, catch unarmed or unguarded, &c.

NA'BAL (S.) a name given to a very rich Jew, that dwelt near Carmel in Judea, in the reign of Saul, whom David, for his churliſhneſs and inhumanity, purpoſed to deſtroy; but being appeaſed by Abigail his wife, he afterwards married her; this word in Hebrew ſignifies both a fool and a madman; from this man we have imported the word into our language, and always mean by it a covetous, rich, hard-hearted man.

NABONA'SSAR (S.) king of Babylon, ſometimes called Baladan-berodach, or Merodach-baladan, Iſa. xxxix. 1. and 2 Kings xx. 12. other authors call him Beleſis or Beleſſus, and others Nabonaſſar; he reigned 15 years at Babylon, viz. from the year of the world 3257 to 3272; the æra or epocha ſo famous among Chronologers, that goes under this name, falls upon the year 3967 of the Julian period, and the year 747 before Chriſt, &c. The years of this period are Egyptian ones, of 365 days each, commencing on the 26th of February, and the day begins at noon.

NA'DIR (S.) in Aſtronomy, &c. is that point of the heavens under the earth, that is diametrically oppoſite to the point that is immediately over the head of any beholder, called the zenith, in any part of the world, and ſo conſequently are convertible the one into the other, according to the ſituation of the obſerver; for the nadir point in the northern hemiſphere becomes the zenith point in the ſouthern hemiſphere, and contrarily, and ſo they are both as it were the poles of the horizon, and diſtant from it on each ſide 90 degrees, and conſequently fall upon the meridian, one above, and the other under the earth, ſo that what diſtance one of them has from the equator, and one of the poles of the world, the ſame the other has on the contrary to the oppoſite pole, and adverſe part of the equator.

NAE'NIA (S.) dirges, funeral ſongs, or lamentations in mournful tunes, anciently ſung at funeral ſolemnities in honour of the dead, by women hired on purpoſe, called præficæ, to flutes and other inſtruments, the tones of which regulated both the voice of the ſingers, and directed the mourners to knock or ſtrike their breaſts, as if they, or thoſe they repreſented, were extremely grieved for the loſs of their friend; alſo the name of an Heathen goddeſs, to whom the old Romans built a temple without the city, near the gate called Viminalis, ſuppoſing her to preſide over the ſolemnities of the dead, &c.

NAE'VI (S.) moles or ſpots in the ſkin, which are two-fold, viz. plain or protuberant, and which frequently happen to child-bearing women, from a falſe imagination, &c.

NAE'VOUS (A.) freckled, troubled with ſpots, moles, or other mixtures in the ſkin.

NAG (S.) a ſmall-ſized horſe trained for women, &c. to ride on; alſo the name of a horſe-hair perriwig.

NAI'ANT (A.) in Heraldry, is a common term for all fiſhes when drawn in an horizontal poſture, feſs-wiſe, or tranſverſedly acroſs the eſcutcheon.

NAI'DES (S.) certain imaginary nymphs or goddeſſes which the ancient heathens imagined to reſide in, or preſide over fountains, rivers, &c. the Painters, to chime in with this ſuperſtition, repreſent them as very beautiful virgins, with hair as clear as cryſtal, their heads adorned with garlands or crowns of water-creſſes intermixed with red leaves, their arms and legs naked, and pouring out water from vaſes, &c.

NAIL (V.) in Gunnery, is ſometimes called to cloy, or to ſpike, which is to drive a large nail or iron ſpike very forcibly into the touch-hole of a gun, and ſometimes, for want of ſpikes, flints, or other ſtones, to render the cannon, &c. unſerviceable to the enemy, which is done ſometimes by the beſieged, when they make ſallies, and cannot carry off the enemy's cannon; and ſometimes by the owners when they find themſelves irretrievably beaten, to make them of no uſe to the conqueror, otherwiſe than to melt down afreſh; in common Speech, it ſignifies to faſten boards, &c. together, as the floors of rooms, wainſcoting, &c. and ſometimes to ſtrike or confirm a bargain by paying part of the purchaſe, &c.

NAIL (S.) the 16th part of a yard running or long meaſure, being the leaſt ſub-diviſion or ſmalleſt meaſure that drapers, mercers, &c. make uſe of to ſell by; alſo a horny excreſcence growing over the ends of the fingers and toes of men, and ſeveral other animals, much of the ſame nature with the hoofs of others, the nails being the covers or ſheaths of the papillæ pyramidales of the ſkin, on the extremities of the fingers and toes, which harden, dry, and lie upon one another, and when ſo done, are a hard, ſimilar, and flexible part, which defends the fingers from external iniuries, and at the ſame time ornaments them; the root is joined to a certain ligament, and by reaſon of the neighbouring tendons it becomes ſenſible; they are made up of a collection of ſmall pipes that ſhoot out length-wiſe, and adhere exceedingly cloſe together, as appears by one of them being violently torn off, and leaving divers ſmall holes, ſo that the horny part of a nail ſeems like a fine net; under the nails there is a pappy ſort of body that is exceedingly ſenſible of the leaſt puncture; ſome ſects among the eaſtern nations let their nails grow ſo long that they ſeem more like eagles claws than mens nails; whereas the old Romans were ſo curiouſly nice in keeping them pared, that there were people who made a trade of it, as our corn-cutters do now.

NAILS (S.) in Building, is one of the moſt neceſſary inſtruments uſed by workmen; they are commonly made of iron, and of as many ſhapes and ſizes as the nature of the buſineſs they are applied to requires; they are alſo uſed in many other buſineſſes, as by coopers, copper-ſmiths, &c. but by all of them to faſten their work together, and ſtrengthen it by rendering the parts affiſtent, and adhering to one another.

NA'KED (A.) without covering, bare or uncloathed; alſo unarmed, or without any other weapons than nature has furniſhed us with, and not prepared for war or battle; with the Chymiſts, an open fire, or one incloſed, and where the containing veſſel is expoſed to the fire; among the Botaniſts, thoſe ſeeds of plants that are not incloſed in a pod, huſk, or caſe, are called naked ſeeds; and ſo thoſe flowers that have no impalement, as the tulip, are called naked flowers.

NA'KED (S.) with the Architects, is the plane or flat of a wall, &c. from whence all the ornamental projections are made, and the diſtance regulated.

NA'KEDNESS (S.) the ſtate or condition of being uncloathed, or unprovided of ſuch neceſſaries as are convenient for the comfortable and convenient carrying on of any buſineſs; ſo any perſon's not being ſufficiently learned or qualified to perform any thing, is ſaid to diſcover his nakedneſs, weakneſs, or imperfection; this term in Scripture is applied to men and womens privities; and ſometimes means being deprived of ſuccour, or diſarmed, and rendered unfit or unable to defend themſelves; the nakedneſs of the feet was a token off reſpect, as appears by Moſes putting off his ſhoes at his approaching the burning buſh, Exod. iii. 5. The ancient Jewiſh prieſts went naked-footed, and the Talmudiſts go ſo far as to ſay the prieſts ſervice would have been unlawful, if they had but trod with their foot upon a cloth, a ſkin, or even upon the foot of their companions; ſome affirm, that the common Iſraelites put off their ſhoes and cleanſed their feet, before they entered the temple. The Turks, to this day, firſt uncover and waſh their feet and hands before they go into their moſques; the Ethiopian Chriſtians obſerve the ſame at the entrance of their churches, and ſo do the Indian brachmans, before they go into their pagods.

NAM, NA'AM, or NAMA'TION (S.) is a Law term, for the taking or diſtraining another man's moveables, or goods; and this is either lawful or unlawful; the lawful is when the diſtreſs is proportionable to the value of the thing diſtrained for, which anciently was called vif or mort, according as it was made of live or dead chattels; among the Scots, it ſignifies impounding of cattle.

NAME (S.) the appellation or word of diſtinction given to any perſon or thing, whereby it is or may be known or diſtinguiſhed from all others of the ſame ſort or kind; and alſo to diſtinguiſh one kind or ſort from another. Names are diſtinguiſhed into proper and appellative.

Proper Names, are thoſe by which ſome one particular perſon or thing is called.

Appellative or common Names, are thoſe by which a ſpecies, or all of one kind are called, as trees, men, birds, &c. among Us, mens or womens proper names are alſo called their Chriſtian names, as being given them at the time of thier baptiſm; and with thoſe that do not uſe baptiſm, it is called the prænomen.

Names, originally were ſuppoſed to expreſs ſome of the more eminent qualities of the thing; among Us, to change a perſon's name looks very ill of his ſide in all caſes of judicature, and is a ſtrong preſumption of guilt; the name given in baptiſm being ſcrupulouſly retained, though a miſtake be made at the time, and a girl's name be given to a boy; but in France, &c. it is frequent to change the name given at baptiſm, at confirmation, as the two ſons of Henry II. of France were chriſtened Alexander and Hercules, who at confirmation were changed into Henry and Francis. It is uſual for the religious at their entrance into monaſteries to aſſume new names, to ſhew they are about to lead a new life, and have renounced the world, their family, and themſelves. The popes at their exaltation to the pontificate likewiſe change their name, and commonly for one that is the very reverſe of their nature; as, if he be a coward, he will call himſelf Leo, if hard-hearted, Clement, &c.

NAME (V.) to diſtinguiſh one perſon or thing from another by ſome proper epithet; this is a mark of authority, it not being in the power of the perſon named to change it; it ſignifies alſo to hint, mention, or put in mind of ſomething.

O'LIVE (S.) the fruit of a tree called by the ſame name, of which there are two ſorts or kinds, viz. the wild or natural, and thoſe that require care and culture; the latter being that moſt eſteemed, is of a moderate height, its trunk knotty, its bark ſmooth, and of an aſh-colour, its wood is ſolid and yellowiſh; its leaves are oblong, and almoſt like thoſe of the willow, of a green colour, dark on the upper ſide, and white on the under ſide; in the month of June it puts out white flowers that grow in bunches, each flower is of one piece, widening upwards, and dividing into four parts; after the flower ſucceeds the fruit, which is alſo oblong and plump; it is firſt green, then pale, and laſtly black, when it is quite ripe; in the pulp of it is incloſed a hard ſtone full of an oblong ſeed; the wild ſort is leſſer and more imperfect in every reſpect; from this is preſſed three ſorts of oil, the firſt and pureſt is what is called olive, or ſallad oil, the ſecond is inferior both in taſte and ſmell, and the third ſort worſe ſtill, and fit only for lamps or other coarſe offices; the fruit is pickled, and much eſteemed by the gentry; the ſcripture makes many ſimilies from this tree, it being very common in Canaan, and particularly upon a mountain that for that reaſon bore its name.

Mount of Olives, was ſituated to the eaſt of the city of Jeruſalem, about a Sabbath day's journey, or three quarters of a mile, and parted from it only by the brook Kidron, and by the valley of Jehoſaphat, which ſtretches out from the north to the ſouth; it was upon this mount that Solomon built temples to the gods of the Ammonites, and of the Moabites, upon which account it was alſo called the Mount of Corruption; it had three ſummits, being compoſed of three ſeveral mountains ranged one after another from north to ſouth; the middle one our Saviour aſcended into heaven from, in the preſence of his diſciples, upon which account the Chriſtians had, and ſome ſtill have it in great veneration, and ſay that the print of his feet was left ſo perfectly upon it, that though the devotees conſtantly carried away the earth, the marks were as conſtantly repaired; and that when the empreſs Helena having cauſed a magnificent church to be built, in the midſt of which was this place, when they would have paved it with marble like the reſt they never could do it; every thing that was put there by way of ornament removed of its own accord, ſo that they were forced to leave it as it was; and that to this day the print of his left foot is to be ſeen about three fingers breadth into the rock, and that the ſtone where the impreſſion of his right foot was, was taken away at the time of the cruſade, and put into a temple, which at preſent is one of the principal moſques belonging to the Turks; ſo fond of miracles are ſome people, that the greateſt abſurdities and lies are by them affirmed in the moſt ſerious manner, &c.

OLY'MPIA (S.) a city of Elis in Peloponneſus, where there was a famous temple dedicated to Jupiter Olympius, ſo called from the name of this city; the ſtructure of this temple was wonderful, and had vaſt treaſures belonging to it, as well by reaſon of the oracles that were given there, as for the Olympick games that were celebrated near it; but what made it moſt remarkable, was the ſtatue of Jupiter by Phidias, reckoned one of the wonders of the world, it being made ſitting upon a throne of gold and ivory, with a crown on his head made of olive branches; in his right hand a victory made of ivory, with a crown of maſſy gold upon its head dreſs; in his left hand a ſcepter made of a mixture of all ſorts of metal with an eagle at the top of it; his ſhoes and ſtockings gold, and the drapery of the ſame adorned with the figures of animals and flower-de-luces; the throne embelliſhed with ivory, ebony, gold, precious ſtones, and a multitude of emboſſed figures; at the four feet or pedeſtals of the throne, four victories, and two others at the feet of the ſtatue; at the two feet on the fore-ſide of the throne, on the one ſide the figures of Sphinxes carrying off ſome Theban youths, and on the other figures of Niobe's children, whom Apollo and Diana ſhot to death with their arrows; between the feet of the throne Theſeus, and the reſt of the heroes who accompanied Hercules to the Amazonian war, and ſeveral wreſtlers; all the place about the throne was adorned with pictures, repreſenting the labours of Hercules, &c. on the upper part on one ſide the throne the Graces, and on the other the Hours, on the foot-ſtool golden lions, and Theſeus's combat with the Amazons; in this temple was alſo an altar erected to the unknown gods, like that at Athens.

OLY'MPIAD (S.) a ſpace or period of time of four years, which was the common method of computing time among the Greeks, and principally from the 27th Olympiad, in which Chorebus was victor; ſo that it was 108 years after the firſt inſtitution by Iphitus, before they kept an exact regiſter of thoſe who bore away the prize at the publick or Olympian games; Timæus is ſaid to be the firſt hiſtorian that uſed this method, who was afterwards followed by Eratoſthenes and Polybius, before whoſe time the Greek hiſtorians only related the facts without preciſely determining the times; theſe games were celebrated in the province of Elis near the city Piſa upon the banks of the river Alphæus, near the temple of Jupiter, every four years, at which were preſent a vaſt concourſe of people from all parts; they began in the 3120th year of the world, or 884 before Chriſt, according to the vulgar æra; but it is very common to begin at the 28th Olympiad, ſo that then it will be the 3228th year of the world, or 776 before Chriſt; to every Olympiad year properly belong two Julian years, that is to ſay, the firſt ſix months from July to January (they being kept about the time of the ſummer ſolſtice) to the foregoing, and the ſix laſt months from January to July, to the following year, though many ſpeak of them as if they conſtantly began in January; theſe games conſiſted of running, leaping and other manly exerciſes, inſtituted in honour of Hercules, to train up their youth in warlike exerciſes; thoſe who were conquerors were honoured extreamly both by the ſtate and the populace, and called Olympionaces.

OLY'MPICK FIRE (S.) the pure fire or heat of the ſun's rays collected by a burning-glaſs.

OLY'MPII (S.) a name given by the Athenians to their twelve chief gods, to whom they had dedicated a very magnificent altar, viz. Jupiter, Mars, Mercury, Neptune, Vulcan, Apollo, Juno, Veſta, Minerva, Ceres, Diana and Venus. It is reported that Alexander the Great, after his requeſt of Perſia, deſired to have his ſtatue received among the number of theſe deities, and ſet upon the ſame altar, which the ſervile flattery of the Greeks complied with.

OLYMPIONA'CES (S.) the victors or conquerors at the Olympick games, who were crowned with a garland of olive branches, and attended home in coaches, and the wall of the city broke down, and they drove in through the breach; beſides this they made them extravagant preſents, and were treated with ſo much expence and reſpect, that the Athenians finding it burthenſome, Solon had a law made to leſſen the charges, which determined the reward to 500 drachmæ, or about 13 l. ſterling; but this law was but ſhort-lived, for a ſmall time afterwards they were entertained in the prytaneum or publick hall. Farther, thoſe who had gained three crowns at theſe games, were excuſed from paying any kind of taxes, or ſerving any troubleſome office; at Sparta they had a particular place appointed them in the army, and were ranged as a guard to the king's perſon; they had the privilege of ſanctuary, and a coat with flowers in it to diſtinguiſh them; it was frequent to chuſe their generals out of them; nay, they were ſo extravagant as to deify them while living, as was Euthimius a boxer, who always came off conqueror; and laſtly, it was uſual to cut the names of the victors, and the hiſtory of their ſucceſſes in marble pillars.

OMA'GRA or OMO'GRA (S.) the gout, or rather the rheumatiſm in the ſhoulder.

OPPU'GN (V.) to fight, ſtrive, or contend againſt any perſon or thing.

OPS (S.) one of the names of the goddeſs Cybele.

OPSI'MATHY (S.) a learning, or endeavouring to learn in old age.

OPTA'TIVE (A.) deſirous, wiſhing for, or after; a name which the common Grammar applies to the mood or condition of the verb that expreſſes the deſire of doing or forbearing ſomething, which is always known by a particle or adverb of wiſhing conſtantly adjoined to it.

O'PTICK or O'PTICAL (A.) ſomething belonging or pertaining to the ſight.

Optick Glaſſes, certain phyſical inſtruments ground or made by mathematical rules, and ſo contrived, that they very much aſſiſt the natural eye in obſerving thoſe creatures, bodies, or magnitudes, whoſe natural minuteneſs, or vaſt diſtance renders them imperceptible to the naked eye; and alſo aſſiſts in more perfectly and diſtinctly ſeeing thoſe that are perceptible; of theſe there are many ſorts, as microſcopes, teleſcopes, &c.

O'PTICKS (S.) in Mathematicks is an art or ſcience that demonſtrates the manner and properties of all radiations, whether direct, broken, or reflected; and when this is applied to the delineation of any figure, building, or body, it is called perſpective.

O'PTIMACY (S.) a government of the ſtate by the nobility thereof.

O'PTION (S.) choice, power, or faculty of chuſing for one's ſelf; in Law, it is when a new ſuffragan biſhop being conſecrated, the archbiſhop of the province, by a cuſtomary prerogative, claims the collation of the firſt vacant benefice in that ſee, as his choice.

O'PULENCE (S.) wealth, riches, power, might, &c.

O'PULENT (A.) rich, wealthy, powerful, mighty, &c.

O'PULENTNESS (S.) richneſs, wealthineſs, powerfulneſs, &c.

OR (S.) in Heraldry, is the colour yellow, or the metal gold; without this or argent there can be no armory; in the coats of noblemen it is called topaz, in thoſe of ſovereign princes ſol; and when repreſented by engraving, it is by filling the field with a multitude of ſmall dots.

O'RACLE (S.) in the Old Teſtament, ſometimes ſignified the covering of the ark of the covenant, or of the ſacred cheſt in which the laws of the covenant were ſhut up; at the two ends of this cover were two cherubims of maſſy beaten gold, which ſtretching out their wings forwards towards each other, formed a kind of throne, upon which they conceived the Lord to ſit, and that it was from thence he manifeſted his will and pleaſure, when he gave anſwers to Moſes; it is alſo taken for the ſanctuary or place wherein the ark was depoſited; and ſometimes it means the oracles of the falſe gods. The moſt famous of all the Paleſtine oracles was that of Baal-zebub, king of Ekron, which the Jews themſelves went often to conſult; there were alſo teraphims, the ephod made by Gideon, and the falſe gods adored in Samaria; whether theſe oracles were really delivered by the aſſiſtance of the devil, or that the prieſts and falſe prophets impoſed upon the people, and made them them believe they were inſpired, we know not; among the Jews there were ſeveral ſorts of oracles; as, firſt, thoſe that were delivered viva voce, as when God ſpoke to Moſes; ſecondly, prophetical dreams, as thoſe of Joſeph; thirdly, viſions, as when a prophet in an extacy, being properly neither aſleep nor awake, had ſupernatural revelations; fourthly, the urim and thummim, which were accompanied with the ephod or the pectoral worn by the high-prieſt, and which God indued with the gift of foretelling future things, upon extraordinary occaſions; fifthly, by conſulting the prophets or meſſengers ſent by God immediately. At the firſt beginning of Chriſtianity, prophecy was very common; much has been ſaid about the ancient heathen oracles, but little can be concluded from them, they being almoſt always delivered in ſuch dubious expreſſions or terms, that let what would happen to the enquirer, it might be accommodated or explained to mean, ſo as the event came to paſs. The famous Kirkher, to undeceive the credulous, and to account for ſome ſtrange things that are related of the famous Delphick oracle, contrived and fixed a tube ſo in his bed-chamber, that when any body came to call him at the garden gate, next to his lodgings, though they ſpoke no louder than ordinary, he heard them as plain as if they had been in the room, and returned them an anſwer with the ſame eaſe of conveyance; this tube he afterwards removed into his muſæum, and fixed it ſo artificially into a figure, that the ſtatue, as if it had been animated, opened its mouth, moved its eyes, and ſeemed to ſpeak, from whence he ſuppoſed the Pagan prieſts, by making uſe of ſuch tubes, uſed to make the ſuperſtitious people believe the idol returned them anſwers to their queſtions.

O'RAL (A.) ſomething that belongs to a verbal expreſſion, or words immediately coming out of, or from the mouth of the ſpeaker.

O'RANGE (S.) a fine pleaſant fruit, with a ſtrong or deep yellow rind or coat, of which there are two ſorts, the one called China oranges, which are of a very ſweet and luſcious taſte; the other called Seviſ oranges, of a pleaſant acidity, and chiefly uſed for ſauce; or to make a compound liquor called punch.

O'RANGERY (S.) a place or garden where orange trees are kept, improved, and nurſed.

ORANOCO (S.) a ſtrong ſort of tobacco uſed for making ſnuff.

ORA'TION (S.) a ſpeech or ſermon pronounced or ſpoke in publick, upon ſome extraordinary occaſion, wherein the ſpeaker or compoſer uſes all the flowers of language, that by the eloquence and beauty thereof he may work upon the paſſions of the auditors.

O'RATOR (S.) a publick ſpeaker or preacher, that in a learned and eloquent manner delivers himſelf to his auditors.

O'RATORY (S.) ſometimes means the art or ſcience of eloquence or fine ſpeaking; and ſometimes a chapel or publick hall where ſermons, orations upon moral ſubjects, &c. are ſpoke or pronounced by an orator; and among the Romaniſts, it alſo ſignifies a ſociety or congregation of religious, who live in community together, but without the tie or obligation of vows, &c. ſometimes it means a ſmall cloſet or chamber with an altar in it, for the uſe of a perſon's private devotions, &c.

ORB (S.) a hollow ſphere or body, contained under two ſuperficies, the one convex or external, the other concave or internal.

ORBI'CULAR (A.) round like a ball or globe.

ORBI'CULARNESS (S.) roundneſs.

O'RBIT (S.) the line deſcribed by any thing that moves round; ſo in Aſtronomy, it is the path, rout, or courſe in which a planet moves, or a comet deſcribes, the figures whereof are various; that of the earth and all the primary planets are ellipſes, in one of whoſe foci, the ſun is placed, and in which they move according to this law, viz. that a radius drawn from the center of the ſun to the center of the planet, always deſcribes areas proportionable to the times; the old aſtronomers imagined the orbits of the planets were circular, ſo that to account for their irregularities upon that hypotheſis, they were forced to introduce eccentricks and epicycles; the moderns find that they not only move in elliptick orbits, but that they alſo move with different velocities at different times; in Anatomy, orbits are the two ſockets or hollows in which the eyes are placed.

O'RBONA (S.) a goddeſs or deity ſuppoſed to have the care of orphans; the Romans worſhipped her to avoid the affliction of widowhood, or the loſs of their children; ſhe had an altar in the city of Rome, near to that of the Lares.

O'RCHARD (S.) a garden or incloſure where fruit-trees are nouriſhed and improved; and theſe are commonly cherries or apples.

ORDAI'N (V.) to command, appoint, or enjoin; alſo to admit a perſon into holy orders.

ORDEA'L (S.) a ſort of trial that women accuſed of incontinency formerly underwent to prove their innocence, which was nine coulters laid red hot upon the ground at unequal diſtances, which if the accuſed paſſed over without being burnt, after ſhe was hood-winked, it was eſteemed an argument of her innocence; this was uſed as a purgation from Edward the Confeſſor's time to Henry III's; ſometimes it was tried by water, and ſometimes by fire; thoſe who underwent this trial uſed to faſt three days before, and then go to church, where there was an office proper to the occaſion; pope Stephen II. cauſed it to be aboliſhed, as unjuſt and wicked.

O'RDER (V.) to command, direct, or appoint; alſo to chaſtiſe.

O'RDERLINESS (S.) regularity, a keeping within bounds, ſobriety, or ſubmitting to commands or directions given.

O'RDERLY (A.) regular, civil, decent.

O'RDERS (S.) ſometimes means the commands or directions that a ſuperior gives to an inferior; ſometimes only a liſt, inventory, or catalogue of books or other goods that a perſon wants; and ſometimes it means being admitted a prieſt, or one whoſe occupation is to be about religious affairs; and ſometimes the ſeveral diſtinctions of friars; as the White-Friars are canons regular of the order of St. Auguſtine; Gray-Friars are Ciſtercian monks, who at firſt wore a black habit, and changed it for a grey one; the Black-Friars are called Benedictines; ſometimes it is applied to the ſeveral diſtinctions of military knights, as the order of St. George; and ſometimes it means the ſeveral manners of building, according to the received and eſtabliſhed rules of architecture, according to which a palace, church, &c. is built, and theſe go by particular names, viz. the Tuſcan, or that which ſhould be uſed for ware-houſes, and other mean ſtrong buildings; the Dorick ſomewhat lighter, and ſo is uſed indifferently in many ſorts of bulldings; the Ionick which is ſtill ſomewhat airier, and at the ſame time ſufficiently grave; this by ſome is affirmed was invented on purpoſe for temples and religious places, and therefore has part of the victims carved on the entablature, as oxes heads, &c. though this is now uſed alſo in civil buildings; the Corinthian is the moſt tender and delicate, and deſigned for palaces and other places of ſhew and magnificence, being enriched with all the nicety that the art of carving can embelliſh it with; the Compoſite is made up of the Corinthian and Ionick orders, and uſed according to the judgment of the artiſt in various buildings; the moderns have added to theſe what the wantonneſs of their own invention could find out, and called them by the names of the Gothick, French, Caryatick, Perſian, &c. orders; in an Army, orders ſignify the commands or directions, given by the ſuperior officers; alſo the whole diſcipline of arrangement and government.

O'RDINAL (A.) belonging or appertaining to order or regularity.

Ordinal Numbers, ſuch as expreſs the ſeries or order of things ſtanding or being put, as the third, ſeventh, fortieth, &c.

O'RDINAL (S.) a book of directions for biſhops in giving or conferring holy orders; alſo a book in which are inſerted the orders, rules, laws, or ſtatutes of a religious houſe, college, &c.

O'RDINANCE (S.) a law, command, ſtatute, &c. of a ſovereign prince or chief commander, governor, or director; it is a term often uſed in the parliament-rolls, and there means very frequently a ſtatute or act, but not always; ordinances being ſometimes only temporary things or orders and capable of being altered by the commons only, whereas an act or ſtatute cannot be changed, aboliſhed or altered, but by the authority of the king, lords, and commons.

O'RDINANCE or ORDO'NNANCE (S.) a law, rule, appointment, command, &c.

O'RDINARIES (S.) in Heraldry, are the denomination given to certain charges properly belonging to that art, of which the number is ten, viz. the chief, pale, bend, bar, feſſe, croſs, ſaltier, chevron, bordure, and orle; theſe have the appellation honourable added to them by way of diſtinction; ſome authors ſay, that when any perſon had behaved gallantly in the field of battle, and was wounded in any part of his body, the king, prince, or general, upon his being preſented before him, ordered him a ſuitable coat-armour, to be as it were a perpetual remembrance of his bravery; ſo if he was wounded in his head, they gave him a chief, if on the legs a chevron, if his ſword or armour was diſcoloured with the blood of the enemy, a croſs, or bordure, &c. for they pretend that each ordinary had ſome peculiar myſtic ſignification, as the chief repreſents the helmet, wreath, or crown covering the head; the pale repreſents the lance or ſpear; the bend and bar his belt; the feſſe his ſcarf; the croſs and ſaltier his ſword; the chevron his boots and ſpurs; and the bordure and orle his coat of mail.

O'RDINARINESS (S.) meanneſs, commonneſs, uſualneſs, vulgarneſs, frequency, &c.

O'RDINARY (A.) mean, indifferent, common, uſual, frequent.

O'RDINARY (S.) ſometimes means ſeveral ſettled and fixed officers that attend the king's houſhold; ſo the regular chaplains are called chaplains in ordinary; ſo an envoy or embaſſador that reſides ſtatedly for ſeveral years ſucceſſively at the court of any foreign prince, is called an embaſſador or envoy in ordinary; in the Civil Law, any judge or perſon that is veſted with authority to take cognizance of cauſes, in his own right, as he is a magiſtrate, and not by deputation, is called an ordinary; in Common and Canon Law, the biſhop of the dioceſe, or he that has the ordinary eccleſiaſtical juriſdiction within that territory, and the collation to benefices therein, is called the ordinary; and ſometimes it means a common eating houſe or table furniſhed with proviſions, where every perſon pays a common ſum for his meal; and formerly it meant the biſhop's deputy that gave criminals their neck-verſe, and reported whether they read it, and alſo aſſiſted thoſe who were condemned by performing divine ſervice, and preparing them for death; to this day, tho' the cuſtom of the neck-verſe is left off, yet the prieſt or miniſter that attends thoſe criminals that are condemned at the Old-Bailey in London, is called the ordinary of Newgate, who is now appointed by the lord mayor and court of aldermen.

O'RDINATES (S.) are all ſuch lines as in the conick ſections are drawn perpendicularly croſs the axis, from any one point in the circumference of the ſection on one ſide, to a point in the oppoſite ſide of the circumference; ſo that any line ſo drawn that terminates in the axis, is called a ſemi-ordinate.

ORDINA'TION (S.) the appointing a perſon to the performance of ſome particular poſt or office; but it is generally reſtrained to the creating or making prieſts, biſhops, or other eccleſiaſtical officers, that were not in that ſtation before; the contention ever ſince the reformation has been very great, about who the power of ordination reſides in; the church of England maintaining it is veſted in the biſhops only, others in the prieſts and conſiſtory, others that the call of the people is ſufficient, and others that it is the prerogative of the civil magiſtrate; in the church of England it is performed by the biſhops only, for which purpoſe there are certain days appointed, viz. the ſecond Sunday in Lent, Trinity-Sunday, and the Sunday following, the firſt Wedneſday after the 14th of September, and the 13th of December.

O'RDNANCE (S.) are ſuch great guns made of braſs or iron, that ſometimes are called cannon, and ſometimes heavy artillery, of which there are ſeveral ſizes and degrees, diſtinguiſhed by as many different names, ſuch as whole cannon, baſtard cannon, or cannon of ſeven, demi-cannon 24 pounders, whole culverin 12 pounders, demi culverin ſix pounders, ſakers, minions three pounders, drakes and pedreroes.

Office of Ordnance, is where the ſtanding grand magazine of arms and habiliments of war, as well by ſea as land, is kept, from whence the armies, caſtles, forts, &c. are ſupplied, as occaſion requires; for which purpoſe, that all things may be kept in order, and always ready, there is firſt a maſter-general, who iſſues out all orders and diſpatches that relate thereto, either for the bringing in, buying, or providing of ſtores, or iſſuing them out to the ſeveral places where they are wanted; under him is a lieutenant-general of the ordnance, who receives orders from the maſter general, and the reſt of the prime officers at the board, ſees them duly executed, orders the guns to be fired on publick days of rejoicing, and ſees the train of artillery fitted out when ordered to the field; next to him the ſurveyor-general, who has the inſpection of the ordnance, ſtores, and proviſions of war, in the cuſtody of the ſtore-keepers; he inſpects and allows all bills of debts, keeps a check on labourers, &c. under theſe is a clerk, who records all orders and inſtructions given for the inſtruction and government of the office, with all patents, grants, names of officers, &c. draws the eſtimates of proviſions, ſupplies all letters, inſtructions, commiſſions, deputations, contracts, &c. and is as a cheque between the accomptant of the money, and him of the ſtores; there is alſo a ſtore-keeper, who takes the charge of the cannon, ammunition, ſtores, &c. and renders an exact account of the diſpoſal thereof from time to time; there is alſo a clerk of the deliveries, whoſe buſineſs is to draw up all proviſions either at the Tower, or any of his majeſty's magazines; beſides theſe there is a treaſurer, through whoſe hands the money of the whole office paſſes, both for the payment of debentures for ſtores received in, and ſalaries for the ſeveral officers.

ORDO'NNANCE (S.) is a term uſed in Painting and Architecture; in Painting, it ſignifies the regularity, proportion, and harmony of the parts, both of the whole hiſtory or its parts; and here regard muſt be firſt had to the landſcape or ground of action, whether it be a place inhabited or uninhabited; if the latter, all the extravagances of art or nature may be indulged; but if the former, ſtrict regard muſt be had to the culture or improvements that are proper to be made; and in particular, regard muſt be had to the buildings, which, if ruſtick, require nothing but a ſtrong fancy, but if otherwiſe, the niceſt regard ſhould be had to the ſtrict rules of architecture; in the hiſtory itſelf regard muſt be had to the ſeveral groupes of figures contained in the whole, that they bear a natural relation to one another, that the attitudes of the ſeveral figures be not forced or diſtorted, nor any offenſive nudities ſeen to diſpleaſe the moſt chaſte eye, and the drapery flowing and eaſy, &c. In Architecture, the ſame general regard is to be had to uniformity, in appearance and convenience within; ſo that the regular and careful diſpoſition of the plan determines the whole; ſo that any one will readily conclude that there muſt not be ſmall diminutive rooms in a large palace, nor very large halls in a ſmall building; one thing obſervable is, that lodging-rooms in grand buildings ſhould be diſpoſed to the ſun-riſing, libraries, picture galleries, cabinets for curioſities, &c. to the north.

O'RDURE (S.) the dung of any creature whether rational or animal.

ORE (S.) thoſe mineral productions that yield metal, whether lead, iron, copper, gold, ſilver, &c.

Orthographical Projection of the Sphere, is the delineation of either of the globes or ſpheres, for the purpoſes of aſtronomy or geography, upon a plane that cuts them thro' in the middle, the eye being ſuppoſed to be vertically at an infinite or exceeding great diſtance.

ORTHO'GRAPHIST or ORTHO'GRAPHER (S.) one ſkilled in orthography.

ORTHO'GRAPHY (S.) in general, means a true or right deſcription; and in the common uſe and acceptation of the word, means the perfect or true ſpeaking and writing the words of any ſpeech or language, according to the manner of the beſt and moſt ſkilful writers in it; in Geometry, it is the laying down or drawing the fore-right face or plan of any objects, and properly and proportionably expreſſing the heights or elevations of each part; and as a part of perſpective it is thus called, becauſe it determines the form of things by perpendicular lines falling on the geometrical plane; in Architecture, it it the elevation of a building, and this is ſometimes external and ſometimes internal; the external deſcribes the walls, windows, &c. of the ſeveral fronts; and the internal is the ſection or perſpective appearance of the rooms, ſtair-caſe, &c. in Perſpective, it is what is commonly called the ſcenography of an object or building, and is that fore-right ſide or plane that is parallel to a ſtraight line, that may be imagined to paſs through the outward convex points of the eyes, continued to a proper length; in Fortification, it is the profile or repreſentation of a fort, &c. as it appears to the eye at any one ſtation pitched upon.

ORTS or OUGHTS (S.) ſuch remains of food as children or others covetous of a great deal leave upon their plates, after they have satisfied their hunger.

ORVIETAN (S.) a counter-poison, or famous electuary, made or invented by a mountebank of this name in Italy.

OS (S.) in Anatomy, is any sort of bone, or a hard, dry, and cold substance, consisting more particularly of earth and saline particles, designed for the props or upholders of the body, to render its motion easy, and serving as a defence for several of the internal parts; some say the number in a human body is 249, others 304, and others 360; though it is certain that the number is undetermined, because the number of the bones of infants differ from those of adult persons; also those called sesamoides, and the teeth that are not fixed to any particular number; in old men and adult persons their form or shape is different, some are round, others plain, acute, obtuse, hollow, spungy, solid, oblong, triangular, &c. and in a particular manner that part of the face, which in English is called the mouth, among the Anatomists is called os.

O'SCILLANCY or OSCILLA'TION (S.) when spoken in common, means a waving or tossing of the body backwards and forwards like sawyers at work, a sort of play or see-sawing, practised by children upon logs of wood laid across one another; in Mechanicks, it is one of the nicest pieces of art that these latter times have discovered, viz. the vibration or motion of pendulums backwards and forwards, to ascertain the number of beats at any determinate length, and the exact quantity of time that is spent in that motion, by which means very great improvements in clock-work have been made.

O'SCITANCY (S.) sluggishness, carelessness, negligence, indolence, &c.

OSCITA'TION (S.) yawning, or a certain light, convulsive motion of the muscles, which opens the lower jaw of the face; others describe it to be a light motion, whereby excrementitious and halituous matter, which irritates the neighbouring parts, is expelled.

OSCOPHO'RIA (S.) a feast celebrated by the Athenians the 10th day of October, in honour of Bacchus and Ariadne; Theseus instituted this feast after he had delivered his native country from the tribute of seven youths, and seven virgins, which they were obliged to send to the king of Crete every year to be devoured by the minotaur, by killing that monster with the help of Ariadne, the daughter of Minos, king of that isle; the ceremony of this feast was after this manner; they made choice of two young gentlemen dressed like young women, who carrying branches of vines in their hands, went thus in procession from the temple of Bacchus to the temple of Minerva; after which all the young gentlemen of the city run races for a prize, with vine-branches in their hands, from one temple to the other.

O'SIER (S.) the red water willow-tree, which sprouts into abundance of branches, that by reason of their extraordinary impregnation with humidity, while green, are capable of being easily bent in all manner of forms, and for that reason are used to make baskets, hampers, &c.

O'SIRIS (S.) a famous god of the Egyptians, who was said to be the son, the brother, and husband of the goddess Isis; by others he is called the son of Jupiter and Niobe, the daughter of Phoroneus; he was first king of Argos, but being discontented with his subjects, he left his crown with his son Ægialeus, and went into Egypt, where he reigned with great mildness, and compiled very good laws for his subjects; he married Io, whom the Egyptians call Isis; it is said he was pulled in pieces by his enemies, and that his wife Isis gathering all his parts together, buried them honourably, and procured divine honour to be paid him; it is pretended that the gods transformed him into an ox, according to the principles of the Metempsychosis, and that it is he whom the Egyptians adored under the name of Apis and Serapis; from hence proceeded the great veneration that the Egyptians testified for the bull, and the worship of the golden calf by the Israelites in the desart, and by the subjects of Jeroboam in the kingdom of the ten tribes; hence the images of Osiris with horns, or with the head of a hawk, or of a wolf, or of a serpent, because it was pretended he was the sun; from these it is rationally supposed the present adoration of cows among the Indians is derived; they gave the name of Osiris to the Nile, and paid divine honours to it, as being the author of all the fertility of Egypt; it is said Osiris taught the Egyptians agriculture, and many other useful arts, for which reason he was so much honoured among them.

O'SPREY or O'SSIFRAGE (S.) a sort or kind of an eagle, whose flesh was forbid the Jews to eat, Lev. xi. 13. it is thus called, because it breaks the bones of animals, in order to get at the marrow; it is said to dig up bodies in burying places, to break and eat what it finds within the bones of the dead, for which reason it is supposed it was judged unclean; the Arabians and Persians call it humai, and say it is the most innocent of all birds, because it does no harm to any animal, and only feeds upon dead bodies.

O'SSUARY (S.) a charnel house, or place in a church yard, where the bones of the dead that are dug up are put out of sight.

OST or OUST (S.) the name of a vessel upon which malt or hops are dried.

OW'NER (S.) the perſon who has a right or property in or to any thing.

OX (S.) is a male of the neat kind that has been gelt, in order to make him tamer, and more fit for labour, ſeveral countries ploughing their ground with them, and alſo to render the fleſh more agreeable to eat; thoſe that are not gelt are called bulls, and are principally kept for breeding; in Heraldry, it is a bearing for thoſe who have laid a yoke on the neck of fierce and ſtrong nations.

O'X-EYE (S.) the Sea Term for a violent ſtorm that ſometimes happens upon the coaſt of Guinea, which at its firſt riſing ſeems to be no bigger than an ox's eye, tho' preſently after ſpreads itſelf over the whole viſible part of the hemiſphere, and at the ſame time breaks out into ſuch ſudden guſhes of wind or ſtormy air, that it frequently not only ſcatters the ſhips one from another, but alſo ſinks and overturns them; alſo the name of a ſmall bird, and of an herb.

O'XFORD or O'XON (S.) the chief city or place in Oxfordſhire, a biſhop's ſee, under the archbiſhop of Canterbury, which has alſo a famous univerſity in it, lies north weſt from London 47 computed, and 56 meaſured miles, finely ſeated for health, pleaſure, and plenty, at the confluence of the Charwell and Iſis, which does ſo divide itſelf into ſtreams, that the greateſt part of the city is encompaſſed with it; this place is ancient, being firſt built by the Old Britons, and is ſo large and populous, that it now contains 13 pariſh churches, all ſo beautiful, that whether we look on the uniformity of private houſes, or magnificence of the publick ſtructures, it muſt be allowed to be one of the fineſt cities in England; the biſhoprick was founded by Henry VIII. who endowed it out of the lands belonging to the diſſolved monaſteries of Abingdon and Oſney; it was diſmembered from the dioceſe of Lincoln, and had at firſt the abbey church of Oſney, about half a mile from Oxford, for its cathedral, until Chriſt Church was made one, which happened ſoon after; the chapter whereof conſiſts of a dean and 8 prebendaries, for whoſe maintenance part of the lands which had been purchaſed by cardinal Wolſey for the endowment of Chriſt's College, was allowed by the ſaid king; the bounds of the dioceſe extend no farther than the bounds of the county, wherein, of 195 pariſhes 88 are impropriated; as for the univerſity of Oxford, this may be ſaid in general, that for the ſtatelineſs of the ſchools and publick library, the ſtructure of particular colleges built of fine poliſhed ſtone, the liberal endowments of thoſe houſes, and notable encouragements of induſtry and learning in the ſalary of profeſſors in moſt arts and ſciences, it is not to be paralleled in the Chriſtian world: That Oxford was a place of publick ſtudies before the Saxon conqueſt is paſt all doubt; but then the ſtudents lived in the citizens houſes, and had only meeting places to hear lectures, and diſputations, as is the cuſtom now in ſeveral foreign univerſities, and without any diſtinction of habit or dreſs; and when Oxford ſhared with the reſt of the kingdom, the common calamities brought in by the Saxons and Danes, the muſes were forced to ſhift for themſelves, till Alfred the learned Saxon king of England, recalled them hither, who having entirely ſubdued the Danes, made it his buſineſs to reſtore this univerſity, and repair its ruins; the firſt college was by him founded and endowed about the year 872, and by ſending his own ſon to ſtudy there, brought many of the nobility to frequent it; then there were ſeveral houſes, now called halls, for ſtudents only to live together in ſociety, as in the inns of court, or chancery in London, among which ſome were in proceſs of time endowed by divers patrons of learning, who thought beſt to ſettle, for ever, plentiful revenues in lands, and houſes, in order to maintain ſuch ſtudents as by merit and worth ſhould from time to time be choſen, and to ſettle large ſalaries for profeſſors to inſtruct them, and for a head to govern them, according to certain certain ſtatutes or ordinances made by the ſaid patrons and founders; in ſhort, there are now in Oxford 18 colleges and 7 halls, in which the ſtudents live with the ſame diſcipline, as thoſe in the colleges, but upon their own fortunes, except certain exhibitions, or annual penſions, annexed to one or two of them; of which take the following catalogue:

Colleges	By whom founded	Anno
Univerſity	King Alfred	872

To make a particular deſcription of theſe ſtately colleges, their halls, chapels, and libraries, their excellent accommodation for young noblemen, large revenues, great ſalaries for publick profeſſors, allowances to the fellows, and to the poor ſcholars, &c. is too extenſive for this place; only it may be obſerved, that there are about one thouſand ſtudents living upon the ſaid revenues, and about twice as many other ſtudents who maintain themſelves, beſides ſtewards, manciples, butlers, cooks, porters, gardeners, &c. the city ſends two members to parliament, and the univerſity two.

O'XFORDSHIRE (S.) is an inland county, bounded by Buckinghamſhire on the eaſt; on the north, where it ends in a cone, with Northamptonſhire on one ſide, and Warwickſhire on the other ſide; by Glouceſterſhire on the weſt; and the river Thames, which parts it from Berkſhire, on the ſouth; the air and ſoil of this county are exceeding pleaſant, wholeſome, and fruitful; its hills are fully ſtocked with woods and cattle, and its valleys enriched with corn and paſturage; its length from Cleydon on the north-weſt, unto Caverſham in the ſouth-eaſt, is about 40 miles; and its breadth about 26, viz. from the ſaid Cleydon to Farringdon in the ſouth; its circumference is computed at 130 miles; it is divided into 14 hundreds, in which are 15 market-towns, 280 pariſhes, about 20,000 houſes, 120,000 inhabitants, and one of the fineſt univerſities in the world; it returns 9 members to parliament.

O'X-GANG (S.) an old term for ſo much land as may be ploughed by one gang or team of oxen in one day, computed at about 12 or 13 acres.

OXYCRO'CEUM (S.) a plaiſter made of ſaffron, vinegar, and other ingredients.

O'XYGON (S.) a geometrical triangular figure, that has all its three angles acute.

O'XYMEL (S.) a ſort of ſyrup, or pleaſant liquor made of honey, vinegar and water boiled together.

OY'ER (S.) a term in Law, which ſignifies the ſame with aſſize, or a hearing of cauſes by juries, &c.

Oyer and Terminer, in Law, is a commiſſion, eſpecially granted to ſome eminent perſons learned in the law, to hear and determine one or more cauſes, eſpecially relating to criminal matters, and is the firſt and largeſt commiſſion by which the judges of aſſize do ſit in their ſeveral circuits; anciently it was uſed only upon ſome ſudden outrages or inſurrection, but now is regularly iſſued every time the judges go their circuits, or hear criminal matters.

Oyer of Record, is a petition made in court, praying that for better proof ſake the judges will look upon, or cauſe to be read, ſome record referring to the matter pleaded.

O-YE'S (Part.) the common warning or notice given by the cryer of every court of judicature, that all preſent may be ſilent, and hear the proclamation then going to be made.

O'ZIER (S.) a willow-tree, commonly of the reddiſh ſort, the twigs or ſprouts whereof are uſed to make baſkets, &c. called wickers.

P,

IS the fifteenth letter in our Engliſh alphabet, and one of thoſe called conſonants; when it precedes an b, it ſounds like an f, as in prophet, &c. in many words b and p ſound much alike, and ſome ſound or change one for another; among the Doctors and Aſtronomers, p. m. ſignifies the afternoon; among the old Romans, it was a numeral, ſignifying one

one hundred, with a ſtroke acroſs the top, thus, F, it ſtood for four hundred thouſand; in Phyſical Receipts, p. ſignifies pugil, or the eighth part of a handful, p. e. equal parts of any ingredients, alſo expreſſed by the term ana; ſo p. p. is pulvis patrum, or Jeſuits powder, being the bark pounded and ſifted.

PABULA'TION (S.) a grazing or feeding of cattle; in Medicine, thoſe parts of our common foods which ſerve for, or aſſiſt nature, by recruiting of the animal fluids; in Natural Hiſtory, it is that unctuous or ſulphurous part of fuel that ſupports, enlivens, or keeps up the light in fire.

PA'BULUM (S.) in Phyſick, ſometimes means thoſe parts of our food or aliment that encreaſe or recruit the animal fluids; and ſometimes that matter that generates, continues, or encreaſes the cauſes of diſeaſes; with the Naturaliſts, it is that part of any combuſtible body, that feeds, increaſes, or continues the fire, or burning in it.

PACE (S.) ſometimes means the degree of velocity, wherewith any perſon or thing moves; with the Geometricians, it is the meaſure or ſpace of 5 feet; a common pace is about 3 feet or a yard.

PACI'FEROUS (A.) productive or bringing forth of peace.

PACIFICA'TION (S.) peace-making, compoſing, or healing differences, treating about, or endeavouring to make peace; by this word the French underſtand the ſeveral edicts granted by their kings to the Proteſtants, for appeaſing the commotions occaſioned by their perſecution, after they had attempted by many ſevere edicts to ſtifle the reformation at its firſt beginning; but they not proving effectual, and troubles increaſing, in Jan. 1562, Charles IX. publiſhed the firſt edict of pacification, by which the reformed were permitted the free exerciſe of their religion near all cities and towns in the realm; March 1563, he publiſhed a ſecond at Amboiſe, by which the free exerciſe of the reformed religion was permitted in the houſes of gentlemen and lords, high juſticiaries, or thoſe who had the power of life and death, to their families and dependants only, and the other Proteſtants to have the ſermons in ſuch towns as they had them in before the 7th of March; but in 1568, he revoked all he had done in their favour, forbidding any one the exerciſe of the Proteſtant religion, and commanded all the miniſters to depart the kingdom in 15 days time, and by proclamation declared he would entertain no Proteſtants in any offices belonging to the courts of juſtice, or of the revenue; but in Auguſt 1570, he again publiſhed an edict, allowing the lords juſticiaries to have ſermons in their houſes for all comers, and granting other Proteſtants two publick exerciſes in each goverment, and the continuance of the ſame where they had it before the 1ſt of Auguſt, and four cautionary towns, viz. Rochel, Montauban, Cognac and La Charitie, to be places of ſecurity for two years; but in Auguſt 1572, he authorized the Bartholomew maſſacre, and the ſame month declared his reaſons for ſo doing in parliament, and alſo forbid the Proteſtant religion to be exerciſed throughout the kingdom; in April 1576, Henry III. publiſhed an edict of pacification, whereby the Proteſtants were allowed to build churches, and have publick ſermons where ever they would, without reſtriction to time, place, or perſons, granting them alſo courts of juſtice, half Papiſts, and half Proteſtants, and eight cautionary towns; but this in December following was revoked, which in October 1577, was renewed again for ſix years; a little while after the expiration of which ſeveral ſevere edicts were publiſhed againſt the Proteſtants, and that none but the Catholick religion ſhould be allowed, and even if the king was contrarily inclined, he ſhould not ſucceed to the crown; but in 1591, Henry IV. revoked the ſevere edicts, and confirmed that of 1577; but ſo ſtrong was the power and malice of their enemies, that it obtained only in thoſe places where the Proteſtants were maſters; in April 1598, a new edict called that of Nants was publiſhed, granting the Proteſtants the free exerciſe of their religion in all places where they had it in 1596 and 1597, and one exerciſe in each bailiwick, and at two leagues diſtance from principal towns; this was likewiſe confirmed by Lewis XIII. in 1610, and Lewis XIV. in 1652; but in 1685, he entirely aboliſhed this and the edict of Niſmes.

PACIFICA'TOR (S.) a peace-maker, reconciler or mediator.

PACI'FICK (A.) of a diſpoſition inclined to peace, good neighbourhood, and friendſhip.

PAGE (S.) ſometimes means ſo much writing or printing as is wrote upon one ſide of a leaf; and ſometimes means a youth that particularly waits upon a prince, or ſome lady, to hold up her train, &c. at viſits of ceremony.

PA'GEANT (S.) a publick piece of gaiety at ſhews, and is ſometimes a fine open chariot with a formal piece of bravery in it; ſometimes it means colours, ſtreamers, &c. in great numbers, to make the appearance the more pompous.

PA'GEANTRY (S.) pompous ſhew, vain appearance, glittering or oſtentatious dreſs, or formal proceſſions.

PA'GOD (S.) ſometimes means the temple, and ſometimes the idol of a Chineſe or heathen.

PAIL (S.) a convenient or neceſſary houſe-inſtrument to lift or carry water or other liquor from one place to another with; alſo the veſſel that milk women carry their milk from houſe to houſe in.

PAIN (S.) ſometimes means ſo much glaſs as is put into one ſquare of a window; and ſometimes that uneaſy idea excited in the mind, by wounds, ſores, &c. or that ſtrong emotion of mind, cauſed by fear, dread, &c. in Law, the ſtrong and laſting pain, or as it was uſually called pain forte & dure, which is a ſpecial puniſhment for ſuch as being arraigned for felony, refuſe to put themſelves upon the common trial of God and their country, but remain mute; ſuch an one ſhould be ſent to priſon from whence he came, and be laid in ſome low dark houſe, where he ſhall lie naked upon his back without any litter or other cloathing, and without any rayment, ſave only to cover his privy members, and he ſhall lie upon his back, with his head covered, and his feet and one arm ſhall be drawn to one quarter of the houſe with a cord, and the other arm to another quarter, and iron or ſtone ſhall be laid on his body ſo much as he can bear; and the next day following he ſhall have three morſels of barley bread, without any other drink than the puddle water next unto the priſon-door; this is vulgarly called preſſing to death; this pain may well be called ſtrong or forte, in that it is ſo grievous that a perſon cannot ſuſtain it; and and laſting or dure, becauſe during life he ſhall have no ceſſation.

PAIN (V.) to affect or grievouſly afflict or torment either the body or the mind; alſo to put many ſmall ſquares, &c. into a window, or petticoat, &c.

PAI'NFUL (A.) afflictive, troubleſome, tormenting; alſo laborious.

PAI'NFULLY (Part.) troubleſomely, laborioufly, fatiguingly, &c.

PAI'NFULNESS (S.) troubleſomeneſs, laborioufneſs, fatiguingneſs, &c.

PAINT (V.) to daub or ſmear boards, cloth, &c. over with colours mixed up with oil, in order to preſerve them from rotting by reaſon of the weather, &c. and ſometimes means the whole art of deſigning or drawing hiſtories, buildings, portraits, flowers, &c. in their proper proportions and colours, according to the ſtrict rules of art.

PAI'NTER or PAI'NTER-STAINER (S.) one who paints things with plain colours, as wainſcotting, doors, windows, frames, &c. or more eminently one that deſigns or draws the repreſentation of men, beaſts, birds, buildings, &c. as they appear to the natural eye, regarding all the delicacies of art and rules of perſpective.

PAI'NTER (S.) the rope that lies in the ſhip's long-boat or barge, always ready to faſten her, or hale her on the ſhore, from whence the ſea-proverb, I'll cut your painter, means, I will prevent your doing me any hurt, injury or miſchief.

PAI'NTING (S.) the art of drawing or deſigning the repreſentation of a ſingle figure, or a multitude or company of figures in their proper and due proportion, colour and diſtribution. Till about the 14th century, the noble uſe of the pencil in oil was wholly unknown, all till then being painted in freſco, or water colours, when John Van Eyck, or John of Bruges, invented and introduced the uſe of oil, by which means the artiſt is enabled to touch and re-touch his performances till he has pleaſed himſelf, by reaſon of its not drying ſo faſt as laid on; this art, tho' really but one, goes by various names, according to the practice or inclination of the performer; as painting in oil, in water-colours, in miniature, &c.

PAIR (S.) two of the ſame ſort or kind of any thing, as two gloves, ſhoes, &c.

PAIR (V.) to match, couple, fellow, or make alike.

PA'LATABLENESS (S.) pleaſantneſs or agreeableneſs to a perſon's reliſh or taſte.

PA'LATE (S.) the upper part of the mouth; ſometimes called the roof of the mouth; alſo the ſenſation of taſting or reliſhing.

PALA'TINATE (S.) in general, ſignifies the office or juriſdiction of him that is called a palatine; but particularly reſtrained to a principality of Germany, now divided into upper and lower, the upper belonging to the duke of Bavaria, and the lower to the count palatine of the Rhine, who formerly enjoyed the whole.

PA'LATINE (S.) the name of an office or dignity, eſpecially among the Germans, given by the emperor to thoſe who adminiſter juſtice in his name to the empire, of which there were two, one on the Rhine, who had the charge of Francenia and the neighbouring countries, and the other on Saxony and other countries ſubject to the Saxon law; hence it is, that the elector of Saxony and the elector palatine of Bavaria are vicars of the empire in their reſpective juriſdictions or provinces, during the time of an inter-regnum by the emperor's death, or otherwiſe. In Hungary, it is a title and office next to the royal juriſdiction, of which the privileges are, if the royal line fails, he has a principal intereſt in the new election, and the caſting voice, if the votes are equal; if the king leaves his ſon and heir a minor, the palatine is the protector and regent of the kingdom; it is his privilege to ſummon diets; he is likewiſe general of the Hungarian forces, tho' limited in his commiſſion by the king; he is chief miniſter of juſtice, and arbitrator of the differences which may ariſe betwixt the king and his ſubjects; if the king goes into the field, the palatine is his vice roy and repreſentative in all places where his title is moſt ſignificant; he enjoys royal authority and prerogative within his juriſdiction, and adminiſters juſtice in his own name, and by his own officers: Formerly the princes palatine in Germany were kings, and upon their being conquered by the Romans, tho' they were forced to ſubmit to an abatement of title, they were left in poſſeſſion of their former juriſdiction; ſuch a count palatine as this William the Conqueror made his nephew Hugo, to whom he granted the earldom of Cheſter in England, to hold with the ſame advantage of military tenure, as the king himſelf held the crown of England; afterwards Edward III. erected the county palatine of Lancaſter, with the title of a dutchy, with many of the ſame privileges of that of Cheſter; the biſhopricks of Ely and Durham are likewiſe counties palatine, but their juriſdictions are conſiderably leſſened, and thrown into the crown by the 27th of Henry VIII. chap. 24. There is alſo mention made of the county palatine of Hexham, in 33 of Henry VIII. chap. 10. which then

then belonged to the archbiſhop of York, but by the 14th of Elizabeth, it was diſſolved, and made part of the county of Northumberland.

PALE (A.) a whitiſh, dead colour, as thoſe have who are troubled with cold, fainting fits, &c.

PALE (S.) a ſtake or thin board ſtuck into the ground, or nailed to a long tranſverſe rail in order to incloſe a garden, &c. and to keep out common paſſengers, dogs, &c. in Heraldry, it is one of the ten honourable ordinaries, ſo called from its repreſenting the paliſades about fortifications, &c. ſtanding perpendicularly upright in an eſcutcheon, dividing it lengthways into three equal parts.

PA'LENESS (S.) fadedneſs, wanneſs, whitiſhneſs, deadneſs of look or colour.

PALE'STRA (S.) a publick place where the Grecian youth exerciſed themſelves in wreſtling, running, &c.

PA'LFREY (S.) a trained horſe of ſtate for a great lady, frequently white, and dreſſed with rich trappings.

PALISA'DES, PALISA'DOES or PILES (S.) in Fortification, great wooden ſtakes or ſpars ſix or ſeven inches ſquare and eight feet long, driven three feet into the ground; they are planted on the avenues of all places that may be carried by aſſault and even by regular attack; ſome are drove perpendicularly down into the ground, others angularly; they are alſo placed on the berme or fore-land of baſtions, and at the gorges of half-moons, and other out-works; the bottom of the ditch is alſo paliſadoed, but above all the parapet of the covered way; they are to ſtand ſo cloſe, that no interval remain between them more than will ſerve for the muzzle of a muſket, or to thruſt a pike through.

PALL (S.) a ſort of mantle or looſe garment, ſometimes worn by knights of the garter, and ſometimes applied to the decent covering made of velvet, or other rich ſtuff, that is thrown over coffins that move in proceſſion on foot to be buried; but particularly applied to the archiepiſcopal veſtment worn by biſhops in the church of Rome, made of lambs wool; ſome ſay it is ſpun by a particular order of nuns; it is adorned with ſeveral black croſſes; it is not above three fingers broad, but has two labels hanging down before and behind, and is worn about the archbiſhop's neck, when he goes to the altar, over his pontifical habit; it is ſaid to be the emblem of humility and innocence, and likewiſe to remind him of his paſtoral care to fetch the ſtray ſheep home upon his ſhoulders; but the moſt effectual ſignification was their dependence upon the pope, to whom the archbiſhops of Canterbury have ſometimes paid 5000 florins for a pall, without which they could not exerciſe their function; for by the decretals publiſhed by pope Gregory XI. in the beginning of the 13th century, it was declared, that an archbiſhop could not call a council, bleſs the chriſm, conſecrate churches, ordain a clerk, or conſecrate a biſhop, till he had received his pall from the ſee of Rome; and that before any archbiſhop had his pall delivered him, he ſhould ſwear fidelity to the pope. Pope Innocent III. attempted to impoſe this uſage on the univerſal church, and particularly on the eaſtern patriarchs, and by a canon tranſcribed into the decretals, he appointed the pall to be a mark of diſtinction, imitating the plenitude of apoſtolick power, and that neither the function nor the title of archbiſhop ſhould be aſſumed without it; and this, not only when a biſhop was preferred to the degree of an archbiſhop, but likewiſe in caſe of tranſlations, when an archbiſhop was removed from one ſee to another; and which was farther remarkable, it was likewiſe decreed, that upon the tranſlation of an archbiſhop, it was not permitted he ſhould carry away his pall with him, but apply to the pope for a new one; and to make all ſure, it was ordered by another canon, that his ſucceſſor ſhould make no uſe of the pall he left behind, and that every archbiſhop ſhould be buried in his pall; thus the court of Rome fortified their claim, and prodigiouſly enriched their Exchequer: This cuſtom ſeems originally to have taken its riſe from the empire, the pall being firſt given by the emperors to philoſophers and learned men, as an honorary diſtinction for their ſuperior proficiency in arts and ſciences. In Heraldry, it is a croſs, repreſenting a biſhop's pall in the form of a great Y. The pall or pallium was firſt given by the Chriſtian emperors to the prelates, in the 4th century, as an ornament and veſtment of diſtinction of their ſpiritual authority over the inferior orders of their churches, as the emperors themſelves uſed it, in token of the temporal power they had over thoſe of their empire; at firſt it covered all the body of the prelate, and reached down from his neck to his heels, and was made of wool; afterwards it was but a kind of ſtole which hung before and behind, ornamented with four red croſſes, &c.

PALL (V.) to grow flat, dull, low-ſpirited, &c. like wine or ſtrong beer, left open or unſtopped, or like a perſon of wit that flags in his writings, or has ſpent his ſtock of wit and invention.

PA'LLADES (S.) virgins dedicated by the Thebans to Jupiter, in this manner; they conſecrated one of the nobleſt born, and moſt beautiful to him, who lay with whom ſhe pleaſed, till the time of her natural purgation, and then ſhe was given to a huſband; but after the time of her proſtitution till the time of her marriage, ſhe was lamented as if ſhe was dead.

PALLA'DIUM (S.) the wooden ſtatue of the goddeſs Pallas, repreſented with a pike in her hand, hand, which was reported always to move as ſhe turned her eyes; the Trojans believed that this wooden ſtatue fell from heaven before the roof of the temple was built; they were told by the oracle of Apollo, that the city ſhould be impregnable, ſo long as that heavenly preſent was in their poſſeſſion; but as ſoon as ever it was carried without the walls of the city, its ruin would preſently follow; during the ſiege of Troy, Diomedes and Ulyſſes entered the citadel by means of mines dug under ground; and having cut off the gariſon, brought away this ſtatue; there was one of theſe ſtatues in the temple of Veſta at Rome, and another at Athens dedicated to Minerva; in the conſecrations of theſe ſtatues, the heathens were very ceremonious and ſuperſtitious.

PA'LLAS (S.) is one of the names of Minerva, the goddeſs of war and wiſdom, whom the poets feign to have been bred in Jupiter's brain, and that Vulcan was forced to cleave his ſkull before he could be delivered of her; it is alſo the name of Claudius Cæſar's enfranchiſed bondman, who was reported to be ſo wealthy, as to exceed Craſſus in riches by 2,500,000 ſeſterces; it is alſo the name of an Italian prince, ſon to king Evander, who joining Æneas at his arrival in Italy, behaved very gallantly under him, but at laſt was ſlain in a duel by Turnus; it is ſaid his grave was diſcovered in 1401, and that his corpſe was entire, with a very large wound upon the breaſt; over the head is reported to be found a perpetual lamp, that no art could extinguiſh for a long while, either by blowing, pouring water on it, &c. till at laſt ſome body bored a hole in the bottom of the lamp, and ſo both deſtroyed the curioſity, and ſpilt all the noble liquor that had fed the flames for about 2600 years; in Painting, this goddeſs is repreſented in a blue mantle embroidered with gold.

PA'LLATS (S.) two nuts that play in the fang of a crown-wheel of a watch.

PA'LLET (S.) with the Painters, a thin, light, ſmooth piece of walnut-tree, or other ſolid wood, whereon they put and mix their colours; it is commonly in an oval form, with a hole cut in it, to put the thumb through to hold it by, and to ſtick the pencils in; among the Potters, it is the forming-ſtick with which they faſhion, beat, and round their work; they are of various forms, according to the uſe it is applied to; in Gilding, it is an inſtrument made of a ſquirrel's tail, uſed to take up the gold leaves from off the pillow to lay on the work; in Heraldry, it is the half or moiety of the pale, which according to the rules of that art muſt not be charged with any thing either quick or dead, neither muſt it be divided into two parts, though it may into four equal parts, one of which is called an endorſe; it is alſo the name of a ſmall ordinary bed without poſts, curtains, or any ornaments, that it may be put or thruſt under a common bed in the day-time to make room, ſometimes called a trundle-bed, upon account of having wheels to the bedſtead, which are now called caſters.

PA'LLIARDS (S.) a cant name for a wretched ſet of men and women, whoſe whole delight is to live by begging, thieving, &c. or any thing but honeſt induſtry, and who to move compaſſion in the ſpectators, the women go about with one, two, or more ſmall children, in a dirty, ragged condition, who are continually crying or making wry faces, as though ſtarved with hunger, and the women making a lamentable cry, or doleful tale, of being a diſtreſſed widow, and almoſt ſtarved, &c. at the ſame time her male companion lies begging in the fields, ſtreets, &c. with cleymes or artificial ſores, made with ſpearwort or arſnick, which draws them into bliſters, or by unſlacked lime and ſoap, tempered with the ruſt of old iron, which being ſpread upon leather, and bound very hard to the leg, preſently ſo frets the ſkin, that the fleſh appears raw, and ſhocking to the ſight; the impoſtor at the ſame time making a hideous noiſe, and pretending great pain, deceives the compaſſionate, charitable, and well-diſpoſed paſſengers, whom, when opportunity preſents, he can recover his limbs to rob, and even murder, if reſiſted.

PA'LLIATE (V.) to ſoften, extenuate, diſguiſe, colour, excuſe, &c.

PAR (S.) a term in Trade, whereby one thing is ſet or made equal to another, as particularly the coins of one country with thoſe of another.

PA'RABLE (S.) is the comparing of things together, or making a parallel or ſimilitude of them with any thing elſe; in Scripture, ſometimes a ſhort, ſententious manner of expreſſion is called by this name; it was the cuſtomary manner for the learned of the eaſtern nations to ſpeak parabolically, enigmatically, figuratively or ſententiouſly; the prophets and our Saviour uſed the ſame manner of inſtruction; in the Scripture, ſome parables are ſuppoſed to be real hiſtorical facts, as that of Dives and Lazarus, the Good Samaritan, &c. and ſometimes fables or fictions uſed only for the ſake of the moral or application; ſometimes it means a term of contempt or reproach, God threatening his people for their diſobedience to make them a parable, by-word or proverb.

PARA'BOLA (S.) a figure or area in Geometry, circumſcribed by two lines, one right, and the other curved; and this is generated by the cutting a cone, by a plane parallel to one of its ſides.

PARA'BOLANS (S.) among the Ancients, were a ſort of deſperadoes, gladiators, or prize-fighters, that run all hazards and dangers; from whence a certain number of clerks, or prieſts of Alexandria were called by the ſame name in the firſt ages of the church, becauſe they couragiouſly and fearleſs of the danger, either of the ſtate or the diſeaſes, went into hoſpitals, to aſſiſt and comfort thoſe that had the plague, who were obliged to be ſtinted by the biſhop, their number being, when at their own liberty, five or ſix hundred, which diſpleaſed the Egyptian governors.

PARABO'LICAL or PARABO'LICK (A.) after the manner, or having the properties of a parable or fable, diſguiſed, hieroglyphical, &c.

PARACE'LSIAN (S.) a follower of the recipes and doctrine of Paracelſus, in preſcribing, uſing, or applying phyſick.

PA'RACLETE (S.) ſignifies an exhorter, defender, or comforter, and one that prays or intercedes for another; this name is applied in Scripture to the Holy Ghoſt, and ſometimes to Jeſus Chriſt.

PARA'DE (S.) noiſe, ſhew, pomp, boaſting; ſo at the marriage or lying-in of princeſſes, &c. the ſtate-bed is called the bed of parade; in War, it means the place where troops aſſemble or draw together, in order to mount the guard, be exerciſed, or diſpatched upon any expedition; in the art of Fencing, it is the ſame with parrying or turning off a puſh or ſtroke of the adverſaries.

PA'RADIGM (S.) an example or copy for another to imitate or do ſomething after.

PA'RADISE (S.) is a general name for any place of pleaſure and happineſs, either terreſtrial or heavenly, and therefore the divines diſtinguiſh by an additional appellation, that they may be underſtood which they mean; but when the word is uſed ſingly and alone, it commonly is underſtood to mean that garden or place, where Adam was created, and dwelt in till his fall, and from whence he was forced out by the angel of the Lord: About the ſituation of this original paradiſe there have been many anxious inquiries, without being able to determine the matter; for which reaſon ſome have imagined, and perhaps with as much probability as the material ones, that the deſcription given of it in the ſcripture is an allegory, in the ſtile and manner of the eaſtern nations, who exceedingly hyperbolize in all their deſcriptions; others have placed it in the third heaven, in the orb of the moon, and in the moon itſelf, in the middle region of the air, above the earth, in a diſtant place concealed from the knowledge of men, in the place where now the Caſpian ſea ſea is under the arctick pole, and to the utmoſt ſouthern regions; in ſhort, there is hardly any part of the world, in which it has not been ſought for, but without ſucceſs.

Birds of Paradiſe, a bird that has curious feathers, delicately variegated, and is ſaid to be unknown whence it comes, or whither it goes.

Grains of Paradiſe, in Phyſick, is the ſame with Cardamum.

PA'RADOX (S.) is a ſeeming contradiction or untruth, though in reality it is an abſolute certainty.

PA'RADROME (S.) a walk or gallery that is open at top without any covering.

PA'RAGON (S.) a perfect copy, model, or pattern; alſo one of equal dignity or degree; alſo a lady that cannot be matched or equalled either for beauty, or other perfections.

PA'RAGRAPH (S.) ſo much of any book or diſcourſe in which the ſenſe is compleat; ſo that what follows is either upon another ſubject, or a further illuſtration of what went before.

PARALE'PSIS (S.) a figure in Rhetorick, in the nature of an irony, which under a ſeeming profeſſion of neglect inſiſts or argues largely and fully upon the ſubject intended.

PA'RALLAX (S.) ſignifies change or variation; but in Aſtronomy, is applied to the deviation or error of the ſight, occaſioned by the diſtance of the term of the viſual line, projected from the ſuperficies of the earth to a ſtar, or other phænomenon in heaven, from the term of another line projected from the center of the earth to the body of the ſame ſtar, or other phænomenon in the place where it truly is; for when we obſerve the ſtars from the earth's ſuperficies, which is about 3035 miles from its center, it muſt needs follow, that the place deſigned, by a right line from the center of the earth, would be different from what we now make; ſo that the ſtar, &c. would ſeem to have a quite different ſituation; and this is greater or leſſer, according as the ſtar, &c. is more or leſs diſtant from the earth; beſides, it has place in a ray obliquely caſt, or when a ſtar not being vertical, projects his beams, as it were, on one ſide and ſo to the center and ſuperficies of the earth; for when it is vertical, caſting its beams directly to the ſuperficies, it muſt needs paſs by the center which is juſt under, and ſo ſuffer no parallax; therefore the farther they are from the zenith, and nearer the horizon, the greater is the parallax. Comets and new appearances in the aery region ſuffer the greateſt parallax; next the moon, and other planets, to whom the earth bears ſome ſenſible proportionate bulk; but higher, as in the ſphere of the fixed ſtars, to which the whole earth is but as a point, there is no parallax; nor is it ſenſible in Saturn or Jupiter, but in Mars, in Perigeon, the parallax is four minutes, in Apogeon ſcarce any thing at all; Sol generally three minutes, Venus and Mercury ſcarce any thing; but the moon, when near the horizon, almoſt a whole degree, and always appears lower than indeed ſhe is; by help of this parallax we find the diſtance of the planets between themſelves, and from the earth, the time of their true conjunction, and eſpecially diſtinguiſh the true moment of eclipſes from the apparent one; and this is variouſly denominated, according as it is applied; as, the horizontal parallax, the parallax of latitude, of longitude, of aſcenſion, of declination, &c.

PA'RALLEL (V.) to equal or come up to, to be at a certain equal diſtance in all parts from another, &c. whether they be lines, circles, planes, rays, &c.

PA'RALLELISM (S.) the condition, nature, or circumſtance of thoſe things that are parallel to one another.

PARALLE'LOGRAM (S.) in Geometry, is a quadrilateral or four ſided figure, whoſe two oppoſite ſides are parallel; but in a more particular manner applied to thoſe figures whoſe ſides are longer the one than the other, and at the ſame time perpendicular to one another, vulgarly called a long ſquare; alſo a device or contrivance for an inſtrument or ruler with ſliding ſockets, to be ſet to any proportion for the enlarging or diminiſhing any map, or other draught.

PA'RALLEL RULER (S.) an inſtrument ſo contrived with ſcrews, &c. that it will draw many lines parallel to one another, without being ſet every time, particularly uſed by thoſe who draw or etch architecture.

PA'RALLELS (S.) any thing that is mutually equal in degree, place, &c. to another; alſo a ſimilar or like caſe or condition is called a parallel one; it is particularly uſed by the geometricians for circles or lines equally diſtant from each other in all their parts, which neceſſarily muſt prevent their coming to touch each other, tho' infinitely extended; it is alſo a geographical or aſtronomical term that expreſſes thoſe circles that are equally diſtant from the equator; for thoſe people or inhabitants that are in the ſame diſtance from the equator towards the ſame pole, are ſaid to be in the ſame parallel, though many thouſand miles diſtant from each other, theſe parallels running eaſt and weſt about the globe, like the equator, only that is a great circle, and theſe are all leſſer ones, diminiſhing gradually till they end in the pole.

PA'RALLEL SPHERE (S.) is ſuch a ſituation in reſpect to place that one pole of the world is in the zenith, the other in the nadir, and the equinoctial line in the horizon, ſo called, becauſe the ſun, moon, or ſtars, in the diurnal revolution, neither aſcend nor deſcend, but move always parallel to the horizon; the earth is thus poſited under the poles, where the year and the day ſeem to be the ſame, viz. ſix months light, and ſix months darkneſs.

PA'RALOGISM (S.) a fallacious or ſophiſtical way of reaſoning or arguing, wherein a falſe concluſion is drawn from true propoſitions, or when a propoſition is paſſed by, which ought to have been proved by the way, or ſome fault committed in a demonſtration, that permits conſequences to be drawn as true from principles that are falſe, or not proved.

PARALOGI'ZE (V.) to argue or reaſon falſely or ſophiſtically.

PARALY'TICAL (A.) ſomething belonging to the diſeaſe called the palſey.

PARALY'TICK (S.) a perſon afflicted with the palſey.

PARA'METER (S.) in Geometry, is a conſtant right line in ſeveral of the conick ſections, called alſo latus rectum; in the Ellipſis and Hyperbola, it is a third proportional to the conjugate and tranſverſe axis.

PARAMOU'NT (A.) proud, lofty, great, or above all, ſupream.

PA'RAMOUR (S.) a lover, or ſweetheart.

PA'RANYMPH (S.) among the Ancients, and eſpecially among the Jews; he was a perſon who was the witneſs of the tokens of the bride's virginity, according to the rites of their religion; beſides which he had the care, regulation, and direction of the feſtival entertainment, uſual at thoſe times, upon a ſuppoſition that the bridegroom was ſufficiently engaged with the buſineſs of the day; this perſon, in the New Teſtament, is ſometimes tranſlated the ruler of the feaſt; this was common to other people as well as the Jews; and it is related by ſome, that theſe preſidents were commonly choſe from among the prieſts, that ſo nothing might be acted contrary to the law or the rules of decency and morality; ſomething of this ſtill remains even in our cuſtoms of matrimony, where it is uſual to have what is called a father to give the bride away, upon a ſuppoſition that no young woman will act ſo ſolemn a thing without the conſent of her parents or friends.

PARA'GMA (S.) in ancient times, was a table or braſs plate, whereon the laws, ordinances, and proclamation of a city or people were engraved, and ſet upon a publick pillar, to be ſeen and read by all; ſomething like which is ſtill in uſe, eſpecially in corporations, who frequently cauſe ſeveral orders, &c. to be printed and put upon the exchange, town-houſe door, and other publick places; it was alſo the name of a publick table, whereon was wrote the almanack for the current year, before the invention of printing, whereon was inſerted the ſeaſons of the year, the riſings and ſettings of the ſun, moon, ſtars, &c. it is alſo the name of thoſe tables, &c. whereon aſtrologers draw their ſchemes or figures to reſolve queſtions, according to the rules of that art.

PA'RAPET or BREA'ST-WORK (S.) in Fortification, is a work raiſed on purpoſe to cover the men on the ramparts, baſtions, &c. from the enemy's common and ſmall ſhot, which is made of earth only, without any ſtones or bricks, to prevent any miſchiefs being done by their breaking or ſplintering; it is commonly 18 or 20 foot thick, ſix foot high towards the place, and four or five towards the campaign, which difference of the height makes the glacis or ſlope for the muſketeers to fire down into a ditch, or at leaſt upon the counterſcarpe; where there is not time to throw them up thus regularly, they are ſometimes made with barrels, gabions, &c. interſperſed with bags of earth.

PARE'NTHESIS (S.) ſomething inſerted between another; ſo in Printing or Writing, a ſentence, either by way of comment or otherwiſe, that is inſerted between others, and included between two marks, thus ( ) is ſo called, the ſenſe being compleat without that addition.

PA'RENTS (S.) are properly only the father and mother of children; but it is often, and eſpecially in the ſcripture, applied to all thoſe of near kindred, eſpecially by blood in a direct line; ſtrict commands are laid upon children, to obey, honour, and reſpect their parents; and diſobedient, ſtubborn, refractory children were puniſhed with being brought without the gates of the city, and there ſtoned to death by the Jewiſh law; among the Heathens, children were ſo much at the diſpoſal of the parents, that if the fathers did not think fit to receive them at their birth, they had the liberty to expoſe them, and in ſome places to kill them; as to education, the Greeks uſed to teach their children letters and ſwimming; the meaner ſort brought them up to huſbandry, merchandize, or mechanick trades; the people of faſhion cauſed them to be taught muſick, philoſophy, riding the great horſe, fencing, and hunting; when they were marriageable, the contract was void without the conſent of the parents; the Athenians allowed a father to abdicate his ſon, by firſt declaring his reaſons in court, which, if approved, the cryer made publick proclamation thereof; after which the ſon was legally ſtruck out of the family, and made uncapable of being his father's heir; before Solon reſtrained it, the parents had power to ſell their children, which was alſo practiſed among the Romans; by the Athenian laws, the parents might have an action of ingratitude againſt ſtubborn and rebellious children, which would extend ſo far as to diſable them from holding any office, for though they were actually choſen into a poſt, they might be ſtruck out of the liſt of the magiſtracy; and if any one had beaten his parents, or not allowed them the conveniency of his houſe, and other neceſſaries, he was reckoned an infamous perſon; and this was a ſort of excommunication, for thoſe under this cenſure were neither admitted to civil commerce nor the ſolemnities of religion; the cauſe was tried by the judges in court with the utmoſt ſolemnity; and if any one that was caſt, ventured to appear at a publick meeting, in a temple, or upon any ſolemn occaſion, he was immediately ſeized, carried into court, and after conviction fined, and kept in irons till the fine was diſcharged; but this law did not extend to baſtards; the ſons uſed to carry the fathers corpſe to the grave, tho' they were perſons of the firſt rank or quality; this ſometimes had its ill effects, by raiſing this filial reſpect ſo far, as to make them the gods of their family.

PARE'RGA (S.) any thing added to another by way of append x, ornament, or filling up a vacancy, or carving in Architecture, flowers, foliages, copartments, &c. in Painting.

PA'RGET or PA'RGETING (S.) the ſtuff or materials wherewith walls are covered or plaiſtered, as lime and hair mixed, and ſometimes without hair; alſo the act of laying the mortar ſo mixed, or plain, upon the walls, &c.

PA'RGETER (S.) one who covers walls with mortar, &c. vulgarly called a plaiſterer.

PA'RIAN MARBLE (S.) a ſuperfine white ſort of marble, got in the iſle of Paris, one of the Cyclades in the Archipelago; it is ſuppoſed, that it was of this ſort that David prepared great quantities for the building of the temple; and that the magnificent hall where king Ahaſuerus made his ſumptuous feaſts was paved with Parian marble, interſperſed with emeralds; the greateſt part of the moſt beautiful works of the ancients were made of this marble.

PA'RISHES (S.) are certain diſtributions of a country into many ſmall parcels, the bounds of which depend upon ancient and immemorial cuſtom, to which there are proper officers aſſigned, and a miniſter for eccleſiaſtical affairs; for at firſt they were not limited by act of parliament, nor ſet forth by ſpecial commiſſions, but were fixed as the circumſtances of times, places and perſons happened, to make them greater or leſſer; at the firſt beginning of Chriſtianity there were no ſuch parochial diviſions of ſpiritual cures in England, as there are now; for the biſhops and their clergy lived in common, and before the number of Chriſtians was very great, the biſhops ſent out their clergy to preach to the people as they ſaw occaſion; but after the generality of the inhabitants had embraced Chriſtianity, this occaſional going from place to place was found very inconvenient, whereupon the bounds of ſettled or parochial cures were found neceſſary to be determined; there was a four-fold diſtinction of churches; 1. The head church or biſhop's ſee; 2. Churches of a lower rank, which had the right of ſepulture, baptiſm and tythes; 3. Thoſe who had the right of ſepulture, but not frequented; 4. Field churches or oratories, which had no right of burial; the ſecond of which appears to be the original parochial churches, which as they became too large were diminiſhed, by taking others out of them, ſo that the general parts of the preſent diviſions of pariſhes is ſuppoſed to be older than the Norman conqueſt.

PARI'SHIONER (S.) one who dwells in and has a right to the benefits of any particular diſtrict, diviſion, or pariſh.

PA'RITY (S.) equality, or one thing that is as much as another.

PARK (S.) commonly means a large field or tract of ground incloſed, in which beaſts of chaſe are kept for ſport, either of a prince, nobleman, or rich commoner; for the preſervation of which there are many ſevere laws; in War, a poſt in the camp, out of cannon-ſhot of the enemy, and fortified, to ſecure the magazines and ammunition, where, to prevent accidents of fire, only pikemen do duty, this is called the park of artillery, of which every attack at a ſiege has one; there is alſo a place appointed in the rear of every regiment, for ſuttlers and others to bring neceſſaries to ſell and furniſh the army with, called the park of proviſion.

PA'RLEY (S.) a conference, diſpute, or talking about any thing, eſpecially in War, when any thing is deſired by the beſiegers, or the beſieged, they beat a drum, which they call beating a parley, or deſire the hoſtilities to ceaſe, while ſome propoſals are made, or action done, &c.

PA'RLIAMENT (S.) among the French, is the name of the ſeveral courts of judicature in France; in England, it is the higheſt and moſt honourable, and abſolute court of juſtice, conſiſting heretofore of the king, the lords of parliament, and the commons; and again, the lords, viz. ſpiritual and temporal; and the commons are divided into three parts, viz. into knights of ſhires or counties, citizens out of cities, and burgeſſes out of boroughs, all which have voices and ſuffrages in parliament; of the members of this court ſome were by deſcent, as ancient noblemen; ſome by creation, as nobles newly made; ſome by ſucceſſion, as biſhops; and ſome by election, as the knights, citizens, and burgeſſes; in the lords houſe, they begin at the youngeſt, and ſo give their voices by the words content, or non contem; the commons give their voices upon the queſt on by yea or no; and if the number be diſputed, two are appointed to number them, one for the yea's and the other for the no's, the yea's going out, and the no's ſitting, and thereof report is made to the houſe. It is ſuppoſed to be called parliament, from the French words parler la ment, because every member of the court should sincerely and discretely speak his mind, judgment, or opinion for the general benefit of the commonwealth; this court by the French is called les etats, or l'assemblée des etats; by the Germans a diet, and in the legal writs, the common council of the kingdom of England; the jurisdiction of this court extends to the making, explaining, enlarging, diminishing, abrogating, repealing, or reviving laws, statutes, acts and ordinances, concerning matters ecclesiastical, capital, criminal, common, civil, martial, maritime, &c. The assembly of the three estates was called a parliament, but without all three it was no binding act; the lords and commons prepare and pass every law, or intended law first, and then the king assents to it, which is usually the last day of the parliament, or sessions, from which time it is an act; but if the time be not specified, when the act shall first take effect, it shall be counted from the first day of the parliament; but if there have been divers prorogations, and in the second or third session an act is made, this shall not have relation to the day of the parliament, viz. to the first day of the first session, but only to the first day of that session, wherein it was made. The principal end of calling parliaments, is to remedy, prevent, or cure those mischiefs or inconveniencies that daily happen by the varying the circumstances of the times: Till the conquest, the great council consisted only of the great men, the commons not being summoned till anno 1217, when the first writs bear date 49 Henry III. They are summoned, prorogued and dissolved by the king; nor is it esteemed a parliament without the king's presence, mediately, or immediately; at first they were called anew every year, afterwards they were kept sitting a much longer time, and sometimes discontinued for several years, both which being found inconvenient, king William III. passed an act to restrain parliaments to three years or sessions; and by 3 George I. it has been lengthened to seven years, at which it now stands; anciently all people had votes in the election, but Henry VI. passed an act, that none but freeholders residing in the county, and that were possessed of the yearly revenue of 40 s. should vote, and that none under 21 years of age should be chosen; and that the members might attend, they and all their menial servants were privileged from all arrests, attachments, imprisonments, &c. for debts, trespasses, &c. but not against arrests for treason, felony, and breach of peace; the place of meeting is wholly at the king's pleasure, but for many years past it has been held at the palace at Westminster, the lords and commons each in distinct apartments; in the lords house or apartment the princes of the blood are placed in distinct seats, the great officers of state, dukes, marquisses and bishops on forms, and the viscounts and barons on others across the house, all according to their order of creation, place, &c. the commons sit promiscuously, only the speaker has a chair at the upper end, and the clerk and his assistant a table near him; before any business be done, all the members of the house of commons take the oaths, and subscribe their opinions against transubstantiation, &c. the lords do take the same test, tho' they do not swear: The house of lords is the sovereign court of justice of the realm, and the dernier resort; the house of commons the grand inquest, but no court of justice; any member may move to have a bill brought in, which upon question put, if the majority agree, the mover and some others are ordered to prepare and bring it in; notice being given of its being ready, a time is appointed for a reading, which being done by the clerk, the speaker reads an abstract thereof, and then puts the question whether it shall have a second reading; after a second reading the question is, whether it shall be committed, which, if of great importance, is to a committee of the whole house; if of lesser moment, to a private committee, any member naming the persons; the committee appointed, and a chairman chosen, he reads the bill paragraph by paragraph, puts every clause to the question, fills up blanks, and makes amendments according to the opinion of the majority; this being done, he makes his report at the side bar of the house, reads all the additions and emendations, &c. and moves for leave to bring up the report to the table, which being granted, he delivers it to the clerk, who reads the amendments, &c. then the speaker puts the question whether they shall be read a second time, which if agreed to, he reads them himself; to so many of these amendments, as the house approves of, the question is put, whether the bill thus altered and amended shall be engrossed and writ fair in parchment, and read a third time; when it is engrossed, the speaker holding it in his hand asks if it shall pass; if the majority agrees, the clerk endorses, Soit baille aux seigneurs, or in the house of lords, Soit baille aux communes; if a bill be rejected, it must not be proposed any more that session; forty members constitute a house of commons, and eight a committee; when a member of the house of commons wants to speak, he stands up, uncovers, and directs his speech to the speaker only; if what he says be answered, he must not reply the same day, unless personally reflected on; nor may any person speak more than once to the same bill the same day; anciently other meetings of considerable moment went by this name, and even to this day an assembly of the two Temples, called to consult of their common affairs, goes by this name.

ings and various readings of particular phrases or passages out of old authors, the customs and manners to which they often relate being wholly grown obsolete; this is frequently more the product of conjecture than reality, though it often hits upon great probabilities, where the means of knowing absolutely are destroyed.

PHILO'SOPHER (S.) a wise, learned, and judicious man, who applies himself to the study of nature, &c.

Philosopher's Stone, a powder that some chymical heads imagine, or at least pretend to affirm, has the virtue or power of turning all imperfect metals into silver and gold; all metals but silver, which they call the Moon, and gold, which is called the Sun, are called imperfect; lead is called Saturn, tin Jupiter, iron Mars, copper Venus, quicksilver Mercury; this powder they call the universal medicine, and say it acts upon the whole empire of nature, which they divide into three parts, viz. the animal, the vegetative, and mineral; as to the animal, they pretend it will preserve the health of all creatures, keep it from alteration, and restore it when altered; and the same upon plants; and also, as they call it, take away the leprosy from metals, and convert them into the purer kinds or sorts of gold and silver: This powder is called a stone, because after it is wrought the artist vitrifies it; for being at first made up of several small parts, he forms it into a mass by gentle liquefaction, which is kept for use; but very unfortunately for the doting admirer, because it must necessarily contain in it two qualities, which are not to be found together in any bodies that nature presents us with; it must be meltable like wax, and fixed and proof against fire to the hardness of gold; the first quality being necessary for penetrating thro' every pore, to the center of the imperfect metal, upon which it is cast, when melted; and the second to communicate the fixedness requisite for gold or silver; and therefore it is no wonder the way of succeeding in the preparation and use of this stone should be very difficult to find out, and that those who pretend to seek after this hidden mystery should frequently mistake the meaning of their enigmatical writers upon a subject they themselves knew nothing of, being lulled along either with the delusion of others, or the enthusiasm of their own brains.

PHILOSO'PHICAL (A.) something belonging or according to the rules of philosophy.

Philosophical Egg, a glass vessel used by the Chymists, somewhat resembling the shape of an egg, and used in those digestions that require a great deal of time to perfect.

PHILO'SOPHY (S.) is the study or knowledge both of natural productions, and also of moral obligations, and this is commonly called natural and moral philosophy or ethicks; the study of nature, no doubt, has been as old as nature itself; but the most early accounts say, that Xenophanes Colophonius began to form sects or teach it publickly, and that he affirmed there were four elements, and abundance of worlds, that the soul was of an aerial nature, that the figure of the Deity was round, that he saw and heard every thing, but did not make use of the faculty of respiration, and that he was an intelligent, wise, and eternal being; his successor and scholar Parmenides held but two elements, viz. earth and fire, and affirmed the earth was spherical, and that it hung in the center of the universe; his scholars Melissus and Zeno Eleates were very different; the first maintained, that the universe was infinitely extended, and without motion; the latter, that there was a plurality of worlds, denied a vacuum, made generation consist of the four prime qualities, and that the soul emerged from a particular composition of those ingredients, &c. And one notion sprung from another, till they came so effectually to lose themselves in the vast abyss of conjecture, as to affirm the world was eternal, and that there was no other deity or supream being, but what they called nature, or the soul of the world: The Moderns have pretty well shook off the yoke of servilely following Aristotle, and other Ancients, who upon all occasions, where they could not account for the phænomenon, were wont to attribute it to occult qualities, in order to cover their own ignorance; but the noble inventions and experiments of the two last centuries have put us upon a much better footing than before, by accounting for abundance of appearances, that the Ancients had no proper ways of discovering or accounting for.

PHI'LTER or FI'LTER (S.) a love-powder, or charm, which the stupidity of some, and knavery of others, affirm has the power or property of influencing a person, so as to alter his or her inclination upon whom it acts, from a disregard or hatred of a person, to admiring or loving the despised object, without any other means used; and this is either only by the natural effect of the composition, when the passions are to be but moderately excited, or else by the super addition of magical incantation, where the affections are extravagantly roused.

RELI'GION (S.) is properly that awful reverence and pure worſhip that is due to the ſupream Author of all beings, called God, though it is very often abuſed, and applied to the ſuperſtitious adorations too commonly paid to ſaints, angels, &c. among the Chriſtians, and to idols and falſe gods among the Heathens, &c.

Religions of Europe. The inquiſition has ſo great an influence in Italy, and the iſles thereabouts, that no hereticks are publickly allowed to dwell there, and all are called ſuch as diſown the pope for their head, and refuſe to ſubmit to all the ſuperſtitions of the church of Rome; only ſome Jews are tolerated, and for that they pay a tribute to the pope throughout the eccleſiaſtical territories; the Venetians tolerate no Jews; in Naples, a few profeſſors of the religion of the Greek church are allowed; Sicily, Sardinia, and Malta, permit no profeſſion, but that of the Roman-Catholicks; Dalmatia is partly poſſeſſed by the Venetians, and partly by the Turks; the republick of Raguſa pay tribute to the Turks, but are of the Romiſh church, and have an archbiſhop of their own; the iſlanders of Corfu, though ſubject to the Venetians, are of the Greek church; the iſle of Candia is now under the dominion of the Turks, but beſides Mahometans, there are Roman-Catholicks, Greeks and Jews, who pay tribute for their liberty; in Spain and Portugal the inquiſition is ſo rigid, that none but Romaniſts are tolerated; in France they are univerſally Romaniſts, and alſo in all thoſe parts of the Netherlands that belong to France or Spain; in the ſtates of Holland, the reformed religion following Calvin is moſt univerſal, though all other opinions are tolerated, whether Jews, Papiſts, Lutherans, &c. only the Papiſts are not allowed the open and publick exerciſe of their religion; but the others are allowed to build ſynagogues, churches, &c. at Geneva, the reformed religion is general; of the thirteen Swiſs cantons, five are Romaniſts, viz. Uri, Switz, Onderwald, Lucern, and Zurich, alſo the generality of Soulern; the others either Calviniſts or Zuinglians, and in moſt a mixture of Romaniſts and Reformed; the Vaudois and Griſons partly Reformed, and partly Catholicks; the Valtoline all Catholicks; Germany has almoſt as many profeſſions as there are princes, ſtates, and free cities, but the emperor is a Roman-Catholick; but Lutheraniſm is moſt countenanced by authority; Calviniſm is moſtly profeſſed in the Palatinates, in the country of Heſſe, the dutchy of Wirtemberg, and the Hans Towns; Hungary is partly Roman Catholicks, and partly Lutherans, and a great number of Arians; Poland is generally Catholicks, excepting in Lower-Poland about Lublin, Pruſſia and Livonia, towards the Baltick-Sea, where there are many Proteſtants, and in the provinces bordering upon Hungary, Moravia, and Si- ſia; and thoſe advancing towards the South and Levant are generally of the Greek church; Tranſilvania has all ſorts, but feweſt of the Romaniſts; Swedeland and Denmark follow the Augſburgh confeſſion, and are commonly called Lutherans; in Great-Britan and Ireland, and the territories thereunto belonging, the reformed religion is univerſally eſtabliſhed, and in England and Ireland the Epiſcopal government is obſerved; but in Scotland, Preſbytery, tho' in all there is the indulgence of other perſuaſions publickly allowed, except the Papiſts; the Muſcovites follow the Greek church, and though they have a patriarch at Moſcow, yet they acknowledge the church of Conſtantinople; the Morduois, that are upon the frontiers of Muſcovy, circumciſe like the Jews and Turks, though in other circumſtances they are not of their religion, nor are they profeſſed Chriſtians or idolaters, but live according to the laws of nature, and worſhip one God, Creator of the world, to whom they offer the firſt fruits of all that they gather, and caſt them up towards heaven; Crim Tartary profeſſes Mahometaniſm, there are alſo among them ſome Jews and Roman-Catholicks, to whom they give toleration upon their paying tribute; Turkey generally profeſſes Mahometaniſm, but Jews and Chriſtians are tolerated in many places, particularly thoſe of the Greek church, who have a patriarch at Conſtantinople, whoſe juriſdiction extends as far as Aſia Minor or Natolia.

Religions of Aſia. In Turkiſh Aſia, Mahometaniſm is uppermoſt, though other opinions are tolerated; the Greeks have two patriarchs here, one at Antioch, the other at Jeruſalem; in this empire principally are thoſe called Armenians, Georgians, Neſtorians, Jacobites, and Maronites; there are alſo ſome Roman-Catholicks, Sabeans, Coptes, and a great number of Jews; the Roman-Catholicks are for the moſt part French and Venetian merchants, who are aſſiſted by the Franciſcan monks, whoſe common reſidence is at Jeruſalem and Bethlehem; in Perſia, Mahometaniſm, according to the ſect of Ali, is the national religion, but all ſtrangers have liberty of conſcience, ſo that there are all ſorts of Chriſtians, Jews, Banyans, and other idolaters; Arabia is ſubject to the grand ſeignior and Mahometan princes, who permit Chriſtians to live there, who have built a famous monaſtery upon Mount Sinai, poſſeſſed by the Caloyers or religious Greeks of the order of St. Baſil; the empire of Mogul in India is ſubject to a Mahometan prince of the ſect of Ali; in this dominion there are many idolatrous heathens, and alſo ſome Roman-Catholicks, Jews, and Abyſſines, all nations and opinions being tolerated; the peninſula of Indus on this ſide the gulf of Bengal comprehends many kingdoms, but moſt of them heathen idolaters, but the iſland of Goa belongs to the Portugueſe, who have divers churches and monaſteries in it; the archbiſhop of this iſle hath under him all the biſhops of the Eaſt-Indies, and here the inquiſition exerciſes its tyranny againſt all that they call apoſtates; but Armenians, Jews, Moors and Banyans are ſuffered to live there according to their religion, beſides Arabs, Perſians, and Abyſſines, who partly follow Chriſtianity, and partly the Mooriſh Mahometaniſm; the people of Calecut generally believe in God, Creator of heaven and earth; but they imagine him to be idle, and affirm it is an evil angel that governs the world; they pay divne honours to this angel, and call him Deumo, and alſo to ſeveral other imaginary and falſe deities; the kingdom of Narſingua practiſes the ſame ſuperſtitions, and have abundance of pagods and temples built in honour of their demons; the king of Golconda follows the religion of the Perſians, but the people are groſs idolaters; the main land of India beyond the Ganges is poſſeſſed by divers idolatrous princes; the peninſula of the ſame Indus on the eaſt ſide of the gulf, is alſo a country where they worſhip idols and falſe gods, the chief whereof are Siam, Tonquin, Lao, and Pegu; the king of Siam permits the exerciſe of all ſorts of religion, and ſhews particular marks of eſteem to Chriſtianity; the peninſula of Malaca is a dependant upon Siam, but the greateſt part of it is poſſeſſed by the Hollanders, who grant liberty of conſcience to all merchants trading among them; there are many Roman-Catholicks in the kingdoms of Tonquin and Lao, where the Jeſuits preach; the people of Pegu are ſo addicted to idolatry, that all attempts of converting them to Chriſtianity have hitherto proved fruitleſs; the Chineſe are idolaters, but Chriſtianity is tolerated among them, and the Jeſuits have divers churches there; there are alſo a great number of Jews, who have their ſynagogues by the permiſſion of the emperor of China; Tartary is ſubject to divers princes, the chief of whom is the great Cham, ſome of the ſovereigns are Mahometans, others are Pagans and idolaters; there are alſo Neſtorians and Jews, but ſuch as obſerve but little of the law of Moſes; idolatry reigns in Japan, and ſince the perſecution of Ticoſama, who reigned there in 1630, the Chriſtians have had no church in that country, though they formerly had; the Philippine iſlands belong to the king of Spain, who gives liberty of conſcience to all thoſe of the country who are idolaters, and to divers Indian Chineſes; the iſles of Sonda, called Java and Sumatra, are inhabited by people addicted to idolatry; there are alſo mixed with them Mahometans and Chriſtians; the Hollanders are very potent in the iſle of Java, wherein they have Batavia; the natives of Ceylon are idolaters, but there are many Mahometans and Chriſtians among them, the Dutch poſſeſſing many cities there; the iſle of Cyprus is under the dominion of the Turks, but both the Latin and Greek Chriſtians live there, without moleſtation, as do alſo the Armenians, Coptes, and all ſorts of ſects, paying only a tribute for their liberty; the iſle of Rhodes is inhabited by Turks, Jews, and Greeks.

Religions of Africa. Barbary is inhabited by Moors, Turks, and Arabs, who are Mahometans; ſome places are poſſeſſed by the Engliſh, Spaniards, and Portugueſe; there are ſome towns where the infidels ſuffer the Chriſtians and Jews the exercise of their religion, upon paying tribute; the chief religion of Egypt is the Mahometan, obſerved by the Turks, Moors, and Arabs; the Chriſtian Coptes have their churches, and the Jews their ſynagogues; the people of Zanguebar, and on the coaſt of Abex, are Mahometans; but the Portugueſe, who have ſome places in Zanguebar, have there introduced Chriſtianity; there are alſo Jews and idolaters; the natives of the iſle of Madagaſcar believe there is one God, Creator of heaven and earth, but they alſo worſhip an evil ſpirit; the French who are eſtabliſhed there, endeavour to bring them over to Chriſtianity; Caffraria is peopled with idolaters, the Hollanders having only two forts towards the Cape of Good Hope, and the Portugueſe a caſtle in the kingdom of Sofala; there are many idolaters in the kingdom of Congo, ſome Mahometans, and divers Chriſtians, particularly in the province of Angola, of which the Portugueſe are maſters; the Guineans worſhip idols, but the Engliſh, Hollanders, and Danes, poſſeſs ſome places upon that coaſt, and the Portugueſe have habitations in the country, where they endeavour to introduce Chriſtianity; the Negroes mix with their idolatry ſome ceremonies of Mahometaniſm, as do alſo the inhabitants of Zuara; Biledulgerid are Mahometans; the people of Nubia have a mixture of the Chriſtian ceremonies with thoſe of Judaiſm and Mahometaniſm; the Abyſſines are the pureſt of all the oriental Chriſtians; heathen idolatry is the antient religion of Monomotapa, but the jeſuits have introduced Chriſtianity in many places.

SE'PTUAGINT (S.) a name commonly given to the 72 tranſlators of the Old Teſtament into Greek, at the command of Ptolemy Philadelphus, the ſon of Lagus, king of Egypt, about three hundred years before the birth of Chriſt, who were ſent to him by the high-prieſt Eleazer, who choſe ſix out of every tribe of the moſt learned in the Greek and Hebrew languages; St. Jerome affirms they tranſlated only the Pentateuch; but St. Juſtin and others ſay they tranſlated the whole; it is recorded, that the king appointed each his cell or chamber apart, ſo that they could not communicate with each other, that he might ſee how much they differed one from another, and that upon comparing them together, they were as exact as if they had been done by one perſon only; but this is looked upon by others as an error, and that they frequently conferred together to ſettle the difficult paſſages, &c. This verſion has always been greatly eſteemed by the Jews, as being done by themſelves, and by the Chriſtians for its antiquity and correctneſs, and for its being quoted by Chriſt himſelf, and uſed by the fathers for the firſt ſix ages, eſpecially by thoſe who did not underſtand Hebrew, as a confutation both of the Jews and Gentiles; many learned men have preferred it to the Hebrew text itſelf, as being done in a time while the Hebrew was a living language, language, and the phraſes and cuſtoms alluded to were much better known and underſtood than afterwards they were; ſome are of opinion, that this verſion was made by five learned elders, and called the Septuagint, upon its receiving the licence and approbation of the Sanhedrim, &c.

SEPU'LCHRAL (A.) ſomething belonging or relating to a burial place, &c.

SEPU'LCHRE (S.) a grave or tomb, which among the Jews or Hebrews was always regarded with much care and ſolemnity, the greateſt part whereof were dug in rocks, or made in hollow caves of the earth; when they became a regular nation or ſettled people, they had appropriated fields or places for this purpoſe, and they generally put ſtones, or ſome other ſignature over the particular part where the dead were interred, that ſtrangers might know it, and avoid polluting themſelves; the heathens were as pompous as any body in this affair, and the famous pyramids of Egypt are remaining inſtances of their grandeur; the Turks, &c. and alſo the Chriſtians, have run into extravagancies upon this head, and from decent reſpect have degenerated into abominable idolatry, by paying their devotions not only at the graves but to the perſons deceaſed; but this is entirely reformed among all the profeſſors of Proteſtantiſm.

SEPU'LTURE (S.) the act of burying or laying in the ground the corpſe of a dead perſon; the Jews eſteemed it one of the greateſt misfortunes that could happen to a man to be deprived of burial, for which reaſon they performed it even to their enemies.

SE'QUEL (S.) the end, concluſion, or winding up of a matter, or the conſequence that follows from it.

SE'QUENCE (S.) a regular or orderly ſucceſſion, or following of things one after another; alſo a term at ſome particular games upon the cards for a ſet of the ſame ſort.

SEQUE'STER (V.) to part, ſever, or divide; alſo to withdraw or retire from the world, or publick buſineſs, company, or affairs; in the Civil Law, a widow is ſaid to ſequeſter, when ſhe diſowns or diſclaims all right to the goods or poſſeſſions of her huſband, in order to be freed from all debts owing by him, &c. in Common Law, it is to ſeparate a thing in diſpute from the poſſeſſion of the contending parties, or the true owner or proprietor thereof.

SEQUESTRA'TION (S.) the act of ſeparating or dividing a thing diſputed from the poſſeſſion of the contending parties, till the law has decided who ſhall be the owner; in the Civil Law, it is the act of diſpoſing of the goods of a perſon deceaſed, whoſe eſtate no other perſon will meddle with; in the time of the civil wars of king Charles I. it meant a ſeizing on the eſtates, &c. of thoſe who were of the king's party; ſometimes it means the collecting the fruits of a void benefice for the uſe of the next incumbent.

SI'NGING OF PSALMS (S.) this has been a very ancient cuſtom both among the Jews and Chriſtians. St. Paul mentions this practice which was continued in all ſucceeding ages with ſome variations as to mode and circumſtance; for ſo long as immediate inſpiration laſted, the preacher, &c. frequently gave out a hymn; and when this ceaſed, proper portions of ſcripture were ſelected, or hymns agreeable thereto compoſed; but by the council of Laodicea it was ordered, that no private compoſitions ſhould be uſed in the church, who alſo ordered that the pſalms ſhould no longer be one continued ſervice, but that proper leſſons ſhould be interpoſed, to prevent the peoples being tired. At firſt, the whole congregation bore a part, ſinging all together; afterwards, the manner was altered, and they ſung alternately, ſome repeating one verſe and ſome another. After the emperors became Chriſtians, and perſecution was over, ſinging grew much more in uſe, ſo that not only in the churches, but alſo in private houſes pſalms were frequently ſung; the ancient muſick not being quite loſt they diverſified into various ſorts of harmony, and altered into ſoft and ſtrong, gay or ſad, grave or paſſionate, &c. Choice was always made of that which beſt agreed with the majeſty and purity of religion, and an eſpecial care taken to avoid ſoft and effeminate airs; in ſome churches they ordered the pſalms to be pronounced with ſo ſmall an alteration of the voice, that it was little more than plain ſpeaking, like the reading pſalms in our cathedrals at this day; but in proceſs of time inſtrumental muſick was introduced firſt among the Greeks: Pope Gregory the Great refined upon the church muſick, and made it more exact and harmonicus; and that it might be general, he ſet up ſinging ſchools in Rome, wherein perſons were educated to be ſent to foreign churches, where it has remained ever ſince; only among the Reformed, there are various ways of performing, and even in the ſame national church, particularly that of England, in which the pariſh churches differ in mode very much from the cathedrals; moſt diſſenters comply with this part of worſhip in ſome form or other.

SUN (S.) that great luminary that God created at the beginning, to preſide over the day, and which, from the viſible effects of its utility to mankind, ever ſince idolatry has been known in the world, has been the ſubject of adoration. The Phœnicians and Iſraelites, when they fell from the worſhip of the true God, worſhipped it under the name of Baal, the Moabites of Chemoſh, and the Ammonites of Moloch, and of the hoſt of heaven, and ſometimes joined him along with Aſtarte, or the moon, offering up their religious adoration, upon high places, in groves, and the tops of houſes. The ſacred authors, at the ſame time that they caution us againſt the idolatrous worſhip of the ſun, draw the greateſt part of their nobleſt ſimilitudes from it. Many of the Ancients did not believe, that the ſun went round about the earth, or that the earth turned about its own axis, and ſo made the alternate ſucceſſion of day and night, but imagined, that when the ſun came to its ſetting, it returned to the place of its riſing, by ſome unknown way: But the accurate obſervations and diſcoveries of later years, ſince the invention of teleſcopes, has given a clearer light into theſe matters. They repreſented the ſun, when it was expreſſed hieroglyphically, as ſitting upon a lion with rays of light upon his head, and a bundle of ripe ears of corn in his hand; and ſometimes by a young man neatly trimmed or ornamented, ſtanding half naked in a ſhip well fitted.

YOKE-FE'LLOW (S.) a perſon male or female that is firmly joined in the performance of any thing with another, whoſe intereſts or labours are reciprocal.

YON (A.) any thing at a diſtance from the perſon or place where we now are.

YO'NKER or YOU'NGSTER (S.) one that is a beginner or enterer in any buſineſs, matter, or affair, a youth or ſtripling, &c. on Ship-board, thoſe ſailors that take in the top-ſails or yards, furl the ſails, or ſling the yards, &c.

YORE (Part.) formerly, in times paſt, in days of old, &c.

YORK (S.) a city, and an arch-biſhop's ſee, the principal place in Yorkſhire, has been famous for ſome thouſand years paſt; in the time of the Romans it was not only a Roman colony, but alſo the ſeat of ſome of the Roman Emperors; Severus and Conſtantius Chlorus, father to Conſtantine the Great, both kept their courts, and died here; it is generally eſteemed the next city to London, or the ſecond in England, and its preſent ſtate is as follows: It is ſituate in a large valley, in the midſt of the ſhire, in a fertile ſoil, and healthful air, built generally with wood, and has ſeveral fine ſtructures, both publick and private, and fortified with a caſtle and ſtrong wall; it extends ſouth-weſt and north weſt a great way, and as much tranſverſely; it is divided into four wards, in which are 28 pariſhes; it is governed (like London) by a lord-mayor, 12 aldermen, who are juſtices of the peace, two ſheriffs, 24 prime common-council-men, eight chamberlains, 72 common council-men, a recorder, town-clerk, ſword bearer, common-ſerjeant, &c. It enjoys large privileges, confirmed to it by a long ſucceſſion of kings; it is a county incorporate of itſelf, including 30 villages and hamlets within its juriſdiction; the river Ouſe divides it into two parts, over which is a ſtrong ſtone bridge of five arches, the middle one being 70 foot wide; by the river Foſſe's emptying itſelf into the Ouſe, even in the city, it renders it navigable for ſhips of 70 tons burden quite to the ſea, which is 60 miles diſtant from York; it is ſeveral miles in circumference, and has four large gates handſomely built, and five poſterns to enter into the city; and tho' there are ſeveral halls for, and companies of tradeſmen, yet the trade being very much reduced, the houſes let at very low rents; the chief preſent ſupport of this city is owing to the reſidence of many country gentlemen, and their families, who reſide here upon account of the cheapneſs and plenty of rents and proviſions; and theſe alſo encouage the polite arts, and the diverſions of aſſemblies, concerts of muſick, plays, &c. There have been lately erected two very fine publick edifices, viz. one a manſion houſe for the lord mayor for the time being, and in the middle of a beautiful ſquare in a place called the Thurſday market, is a moſt magnificent market-houſe, where the chief market is now kept on Saturday; the cathedral for its age, beauty, and largeneſs, is very juſtly reckoned one of the fineſt in England; and yet there are many merchants reſiding in it who have alſo a fine hall; the town-hall is both the moſt magnificent and convenient built upon the bridge, and the Guild-Hall, in which are kept the courts of juſtice, is very large and fine; and beneath theſe is the priſon for felons, called Kid-Cotes, and oppoſite to the priſon for debtors; there are four market-days weekly, viz. Tueſday, Thurſday, Friday and Saturday, which are plentifully ſupplied with fleſh, fiſh, fowl, and corn of all ſorts; the market-houſe in the ſtreet called the Pavement, is eſteemed a fine piece of architecture, being ſupported by 12 pillars of the Tuſcan order; it ſends two members to parliament; diſtant from London 150 computed, and 192 meaſured miles.

YO'RKSHIRE (S.) is by much the largeſt county in England, being 360 miles in circumference, divided into three principal parts, called ridings, viz. the weſt, eaſt, and north ridings, in which are computed 106,200 houſes, one city, called York, beſides which there are 49 market-towns, and 563 pariſhes, moſt of which being very large, have alſo their chapels of eaſe; it is bounded on the eaſt by the German ocean, on the ſouth with Derbyſhire, Nottinghamſhire, and Lincolnſhire, on the weſt with Lancaſhire and a ſmall part of Cheſhire, and on the north with the biſhoprick of Durham and county of Cumberland, of a ſquare form, whoſe ſide is 90 miles long; it is univerſally bleſſed with a wholeſome and temperate air, and tolerably fertile; this county is particularly noted for breeding the beſt horſes, for all ſorts of uſeful ſervices, and particularly hunting and race horſes; and although there are alſo abundance of coal and lead mines, and quarries of free and lime ſtone, and all the neceſſaries of life, yet the divers ſorts of woollen manufactures, that are very vigorouſly carried on in divers parts of it, employ the greateſt number of hands; this county of late years is become particularly famous for making and curing legs of pork into what are commonly called hams, and this art is now alſo practiſed with very good ſucceſs in all the northern counties; it ſends 30 members to parliament.

YOU (S.) ſometimes means a ſingle perſon, which in ſtrictneſs ſhould be thou, or thee, and ſometimes many; but it is now commonly ſpoke or ſaid to the perſon or perſons to whom we ſpeak, be it one or many.

YOUNG (A.) not yet arrived to its full growth or maturity, any thing that is growing ripe; alſo ſpoke of men or women that are in the prime of their years, and in oppoſition to old age.

YOU'NGER (A.) any perſon or thing not ſo old as another.

YOU'NGSTER (S.) a lad or young perſon; alſo any one that is but newly entered upon a trade or buſineſs.

YOUTH (S.) a young man, or perſon not at full age; alſo the ſtate or condition of a perſon's younger years.

YOU'THFUL (A.) like to, or in the younger days of a perſon's age.

Z.

THIS is reckoned the laſt or 24th letter in our alphabet, and called a conſonant, is derived from the Greeks, and uſed only in words of that original; the Latins have no need of it, and uſe ſ inſtead thereof; it was a numeral among the Ancients, that ſtood for 2000, and when daſhed, thus, $\overline{Z}$, four millions; in Phyſicians Bills, or Preſcriptions, ſignifies a dram.

ZA'BIANS (S.) ſuppoſed to be the ancient Chaldeans, who addicted themſelves to aſtrology, and the worſhip of the ſtars, and made it their chief employment to form taliſmans under certain aſpects of the planets.

ZA'CAT (S.) ſo much of a Turk's eſtate or goods as he appropriates to, or allows for the relief of the poor.

ZA'FFREN (S.) any thing of a yellow colour, but generally now means the plant we call ſaffron.

ZA'MORIN (S.) a title for a ſovereign prince in Malabar in the Eaſt Indies.

ZA'NY (S.) a merry-andrew, an antick, or fellow who ſhews tricks to amuſe the vulgar, and make them laugh, &c.

ZA'PHARA (S.) a mineral uſed by the potters to make a blue or ſky colour.

ZEAL (S.) hath various ſignifications in ſcripture; ſometimes it means a fervent or earneſt deſire to promote or propagate any doctrine or opinion; ſometimes the anger or indignation that is expreſſed againſt any thing; ſometimes it means jealouſy, ſometimes envy, &c.

ZEA'LAND (S.) an iſland in Denmark of a circular form, containing about 18 Engliſh miles in circumference, having no bread-corn growing in it but rye; has no rivers, but about half a ſcore ſmall brooks, but a great number of fine lakes well ſtored with fiſh; the air but indifferent, eſpecially about Copenhagen, occaſioned by the frequent fogs, and its low ſituation; it has no ſea-port but Copenhagen, nor does it want any, having no commodities for exportation; the cattle are generally ſmall and lean, being forced to be kept houſed about eight months in the year; they have but two ſeaſons in their year, viz. ſummer and winter, for a ſpring is never known, and autumn very rarely; you immediately paſs from extremity of heat to extremity of cold, and when winter is over, from cold to heat.—Alſo the name of one of the United Provinces, lying between Holland, Flanders, Brabant, and the German Sea; the inhabitants are great traders, and fiſh much; the princes of Orange are hereditary governors of this iſland.

ZEA'LOT (S.) one that is a great favourer of, ſtickler for, or promoter of any opinion.

ZEA'LOUS (A.) eager, very earneſt for, or after.

ZE'DOARY (S.) an Indian root of a hot and dry nature, uſed in diſeaſes occaſioned by wind; it is of two ſorts, the long and the round.

ZE'MBLIANS (S.) a people that inhabit the northern part of the world, about the ſtreights of Waigates, of a ſmall ſtature, but have great heads, large faces, and ſmall eyes, ſome without beards, their hair generally black, and their ſkin ſwarthy; they adore the ſun and moon, and images in the ſhape of men, which they carve out of the ſtumps of trees.

ZE'NITH (S.) an Aſtronomical term for that point in the heavens immediately over the head of the beholder, let him ſtand where-ever he will.

ZE'NSUS or ZE'NZUS (S.) a term in the old Algebra or Coſſicks, for what we now call a ſquare, or the ſecond power.

ZE'PHYRUS (S.) the weſt-wind.

ZE'RETH (S.) a Hebrew meaſure of length, which was half a cubit, or ten inches and a quarter.

ZEST (S.) the ſkin that covers the kernel of a walnut; alſo the red or outward ſkin of an orange, lemon, &c.

ZETE'TICK METHOD (S.) among the Mathematicians, is the algebraick or analytick method of anſwering queſtions, in which the nature and reaſon of the thing is principally ſought for.

ZEU'GMA (S.) a figure in Grammar, when a verb agreeing with divers nouns, or an adjective with divers ſubſtantives, is referred to one expreſly, and to the other by ſupplement.

ZINDIKI'TES (S.) a ſort of Mahometan hereticks, or rather atheiſts, who neither believe a providence, or the reſurrection of the dead; they ſay, there is no other god but the four elements, that man is a mixture of theſe, and after death reſolves into them.

ZINK (S.) a baſtard ſort of metal, of a yelloviſh colour, ſome call it ſpelter, and ſome biſmuth, &c.

ZI'ZITH (S.) the tufts or fringes worn by the ancient Jews at the four quarters of their upper garment, and which now they wear under their cloaths fixed to a ſquare piece of cloth, to repreſent the garment their anceſ-

tors wore before their diſperſion; it conſiſts of a tuft compoſed of eight threads of yarn ſpun on purpoſe, each having five knots, which take up half the length, that which is knotted, is furled out, and makes a ſort of fringe.

ZO'CCO, ZO'CLE, or SO'CLE (S.) a little pedeſtal or ſtand for a buſto, or a figure that wants elevation.

ZO'DIACK (S.) the greateſt circle upon the material ſphere, which the old aſtronomers ſaid was 12 degrees broad, and the moderns 18, cutting the equinoctial into two equal parts; in the midſt of it is the ecliptick, under which the ſun conſtantly moveth, leaving on each ſide ſix degrees of latitude; in this the 12 ſigns are fixed, called for the moſt part by the name of living creatures; alſo a limit which the accurate obſervations of the laſt century has diſcovered to contain moſt of the comets.

ZONE (S.) a belt or girdle anciently worn by virgins about the waiſt at the time of their marriage, and which the bridegroom looſened or took off the firſt night; in Phyſick, it means the waiſt, or middle part of the body; and alſo a ſpreading diſeaſe by ſome called the ſhingles, &c. In Geography, it is a certain portion of the earth, the whole being divided into five parts or zones; the firſt is that ſpace between the two tropicks, 23 degrees and a half on each ſide the equinoctial, called the torrid or burning zone, upon account of its extraordinary heat, by reaſon of the perpendicularity of the ſun's beams or rays; this large tract the ancients imagined to be uninhabitable; the ſecond and third are the two temperate zones, the one in the northern, the other in the ſouthern hemiſphere, beginning where the torrid zone ends, and extending to the arctick and antarctick circles, which is about 42 degrees to each; the fourth and fifth are what are called the frigid zones, beginning in each hemiſphere where the temperate zone ends, and extend to each pole.

ZOO'GRAPHER (S.) one who deſcribes the nature and forms of living creatures.

ZOO'GRAPHY (S.) the art of deſcribing the forms, properties, &c. of living creatures.

ZOO'LOGY (S.) a treatiſe or diſcourſe of living creatures.

ZOO'TOMY (S.) the art of diſſecting any ſort of animals but the human ſpecies.

ZYMO'MA (S.) any thing that cauſes or excites fermentation.

ZZ (S.) a character among the ancient phyſicians for myrrh; but by the moderns uſed for ginger.

THE Deſign of the following CATALOGUE of Names of Perſons and Places, is, that ſuch Readers as are converſant with Engliſh Books only, may meet with a large Collection ready made to their Hands, in order to know how to ſpell them: In which you will note, that, as many of them are Eaſtern Names, and principally contained in the Old Teſtament, or ſuch Hiſtories as the Commentators muſt neceſſarily read to underſtand many Parts thereof, you will find that Men and Places frequently had the ſame Name; as noble Families among us even at this Day are more frequently called by the Name of their Title, than of their Families; as, the Duke of Bedford is ſeldom called Ruſſel, &c. Another Reaſon is, that there are but few of them mentioned in the Body of the Work, becauſe anciently Men were denominated from ſome extraordinary Virtue, Vice, Art, &c. they were Maſters of, which ſame Name ſerves now only for the Diſtinction of one Perſon from another, without having Regard to any thing further; ſo the ſame may be ſaid of Places, &c. And as moſt of the ancient Hiſtories are now tranſlated into Engliſh, the Names of the principal Actors muſt of courſe become familiar to the Readers; ſo that it was judged proper to inſert the following ALPHABET, wherein Kings, Emperors, Queens, Prieſts, Philoſophers, Rulers, Judges, &c. are promiſcuouſly ſet down, and marked where the Streſs or Tone of the Voice ſhould be, in order to ſhew the proper Pronunciation.
